Southampton Hospital Financial Decision Nears — Because it Has to

By Dan Rattiner

"What do you think is going to happen with Southampton Hospital?"

If you live in the Hamptons year around, you are familiar with this question. It is asked by summer people, year-round weekend people, other local people and medical people. Nobody used to ask this question. But they do now.

And the answer is that we just don't know. Southampton Hospital is, quite literally, at a financial crossroads. What happens this year and next will determine the hospital's future: whether there is one, or whether there isn't one.

The crossroads has come about because of something that happened ten years ago. Until 1997, the Hospital was financially quite healthy. It had an old line, well-to-do board of directors that steered it. And it had an endowment of about ten million dollars to fall back on.

During those years, a man named Dr. John Ferry came to be the President of the hospital. He was a personable, handsome, energetic man with grand ideas for the place. And everybody, including the Board, went along with him. Southampton Hospital was the first line of defense for some of the wealthiest people in the country. He wanted it to look it. He wanted patients to be greeted at the front door with valet service. Inside the place, which he completely refurbished, there would be fresh cut flowers, original paintings on the walls, a concierge to welcome you and an entirely new look created by a prominent interior designer.

Also, he wanted the clientele of the place to not even have to come to the hospital if they didn't absolutely have to. He'd create a group of hospital medical buildings in the surround-even the board of directors, had realized that he had blown through the hospital's entire endowment and dug a huge financial hole. When the truth came out, and it was found out that the place owed a total of $40 million, he was told to leave the premises. And he did.

At the time, the hospital had an annual revenue stream of $70 million. A $40 million hole was a huge thing to have to dig its way out of. And so the choice was to either declare bankruptcy and reorganize, or to formalize the debt with some sort of consolidation and put off paying it for another day. The Board chose the latter option. The County came in and organized it as a bond, and so the hospital, as the terms of the bond decreed, began paying at a fixed rate of seven and a half percent for the first ten years, interest only. After ten years — who knew what would be the case after ten years — the hospital would have to start to pay off the principal too.

Well, to deal with this situation, the Board of the Hospital hired a new CEO, and then another CEO, and another and another. All together there have been five CEOs in ten years. And each of them sized up the situation and — in spite of the fact that the Board hired consultants costing as much as $1 million a ing communities as satellites where there would be rehabilitation, emergency treatment, heart monitoring, elder care and other services. He became, as I recall, the toast of the Hamptons. He was photographed at fundraisers, he made speeches to women's groups, he appeared on radio and TV. And he accomplished everything he said he would. For a brief moment, nobody, apparently not year to advise them — cashed out and left. It's been said that none of these CEOs had the financial experience to deal with this. And the constant presence of the consultants may be the proof of that, but that's what happened. Incidentally, it should be noted that without this enormous overhanging debt, the hospital can — and actually has — broken even from year to year on the money it has taken in. It has done this for ten years. Meanwhile, it's paid the bondholders $30 million in interest using a creative method few know about that I will describe shortly. It has not come from cash flow. The point here, though, is that it's been $30 million paid out from the hospital's treasury, money that has gone to bankers and investors who own the bonds, not the community for its medical care.

Where has the $30 million come from? The answer is that the Board has borrowed from Peter to pay Paul. The way they have done this is to slowly, every year, re-mortgage another of the off-campus properties that Dr. Ferry put in place. They are getting the cash from other banks who are giving them new mortgages at higher interest, and they are using the money to pay the bondholders that lent them the $40 million. The result is that their indebtedness is increasing, and the hole they are digging themselves into is getting deeper, but the bondholders are being paid. Obviously, this cannot go on indefinitely.

There is considerable money in this community. And the hospital fundraiser held on Wickabogue Road every summer raises about $1.6 million (which goes to allow the hospital to break even). Beyond that, who wants to donate a large sum to a hospital when they know it won't go to the hospital but to some bankers?

Well, we need this hospital. And this Catch 22 cannot continue. They are running out of things to remortgage. And as the years go by, the donors shy further and further away. And so a foreclosure looms. By the way, those who set up this bond originally did the hospital almost as great a disservice as Dr. Ferry did. It has been set up with huge penalties for early payment. The bondholders would just like it to keep going as it is.

But there are two lights at the end of the tunnel. One is a group called the Hamptons Health Society (631-283-8604), which is funded by several local doctors, spearheaded by Dr. Peter Michalos. This group has been set up as a separate non-profit corporation that can accept donations from residents which can be used only to buy equipment, supplies and services for the doctors and patients at the hospital. With the money that's already come in, they have brought in some of the highest tech stuff imaginable to Southampton. These include a coagulation machine (first in the N.Y. metropolitan area), a digital x-ray machine so x-rays can be read on the spot, and an IV fluid warmer. Other monies have come in for nursing, a scholarship for nurses aides — the first is at school now — and various hospital equipment such as state of the art wheelchairs.

"Few people know this, but Southampton Hospital has a higher percentage of board certified physicians on staff than any other hospital in the state," Dr. Michalos told me. "Southampton also has full 24 hour cardiac physician care, all board certified. It is a hospital in a wealthy community. It will do just fine when these financial problems get cleared up. But if people think this is all going to happen on its own, that the hospital will never go out of business, then they should look again."

He mentions Smithtown Hospital, Hempstead Hospital, United Hospital in Parkchester and a whole host of other small hospitals that fell into financial holes and then closed down. The loans were foreclosed. The supplies inside were sold at auction and carted out the front door by moving van.

The time has come for the current Board to take action. It has to happen this year. There is now, finally, an aggressive CEO in place, Dr.

Tide Watch

The Internet, the Sea, Writing Stories, Surfers and the Perfect Gift

By Dan Rattiner

As you may know, many of these stories are written on the beach. I go out in a 4 wheel drive, either to Indian Wells, Wyborg, Sagg Main, Mecox or Road D and, if it's winter, I sit in the passenger seat and if it's summer, I sit in a folding chair at the water's edge and I'll write.

I have, I think, everything I need. Almost. I have a dog, a laptop computer, a beach umbrella, a beach blanket, a bottle of water and all the proper stickers for beach driving. But one thing has always bedeviled me. It's knowing the tides. I'd be sitting ten feet from the ocean, busy working on something about the Indians and one of the first settlers, David Gardiner, and I'd get to the part where the other settlers are accusing Goodye Garlick of being a witch and I'd feel something wet and discover that there's surf sliding over my sneakers. Uh oh.

I tried ripping out the tide tables from the newspaper and taking them with me, but I'd often forget. I bought a tide clock, a big thing that has one hand that moves around and points to high tide, medium tide, low tide or incoming tide and I'd have it on the wall, but I'd forget to look at it.

It's a big deal not knowing the tide. I'm out there sometimes for three hours. A 2005 Land Rover LE is an expensive thing to have sink down onto its haunches in the ocean so you can't get it out. That's especially bad when the waves are big ten-foot boomers.

Which made me think of surfers.

"Yeah, sure, they make them, dude," one of them said to me. "Just go down to any surf shop."

"How much are they?"

I have my cell phone with the time on it. It's a twenty-first century version of a nineteenth-century pocket watch.

"You can get tide watches that give you two locations instead of one. Even three locations. They come with stopwatches or no stopwatches, alarms, moon phases or no moon phases. You can spend from $50 to $500. Of course all of them are waterproof."

"Of course."

Why hadn't I ever thought of this before? I've been writing on the beach for twenty years. And the thing is, I no longer wear a regular watch. I have my cell phone with the time on it. (It's a twenty first century version of a nineteenth century pocket watch.) How cool it would be to have a tide watch. Be at a business meeting in a tie and jacket and look to see what the tide is doing at Sagg.

What I didn't want was a big gloppy designer tide watch. I could imagine surfers out there with all the latest gear and with their five hundred dollar gizmos. Not for me.

(I have my own designer Land Rover. It has stickers from New Zealand and Africa on the back, it has fog lights that, it turns out, are perfect for blinding people who don't put their brights down, and it has broken fishing rods on the roof. I'm not a fisherman. But to use my sticker on the State beaches, I have to have fishing gear on my car. On the other hand, I want anybody who thinks they want to steal my gear off the roof to look and see the stuff is just for show. I've succeeded.)

There are two ways I could get a tide watch. I could go online or I could go to a surf shop. We've got surf shops advertising so I went to Main Beach in Wainscott. Yes, they had tide watches, and they showed them to me. Both of them were big and gloppy. One at $149, another at $249. That was it.

"I'm looking for something plainer and less expensive," I told the salesclerk. "I'll come back another time."

"Come back in May," he said. "We have all the watches in for the summer."

And so I went online. I felt a bit guilty about it. But I had tried. And of course, in ten minutes, I'd Googled "Tide Watch," gone to some sites, found a simple tide watch for $69 just as I wanted, highlighted it, put it in the shopping cart and checked it out. It was on its way.

How are retail stores going to survive against shopping on the Internet? I had read somewhere that the stores themselves do the most business. People remember the name of a store, Google it, go to it, and so the store gets it anyway. Well, maybe that works.

Later in the day, I got a message about the $69 watch.

"Your watch has been ordered from the manufacturer," it said. "We will be shipping it to you when it comes in. That might be, perhaps in two weeks."

This is like the scene in Wizard of Oz where the Wizard comes out from behind the curtain to reveal himself. There's actually people at the other end of the Internet doing the stuff, just like they do at the stores. Hmmm.

James Murtha at Ditch Plains

Another problem I have is checking wind direction. It's important because on sunny days in the off season, I can sit outside the Land Rover and use the vehicle as a windblock. I need to be on the downwind side, though. A sunny day at forty five degrees with no wind can be beautiful out alongside a windblock. But which way is the wind coming from? I once had a child's airport windsock on a stick I could shove up and out the moonroof of the Land Rover for a minute that would allow me to jockey the car into the correct position to block the wind. But I lost it. Since then, I either get out of the car, lick my index finger and hold it up to see which side got dry, or I break off a tiny piece of tissue paper and throw it up and watch which way it flies off. Or I find seagull feathers and throw them up in the air. Seagull feathers are often found on the beach and are more ecological. (When creatures get hungry, in case you haven't noticed, they eat each other. But they spit out the feathers. I keep a stash of seagull feathers on the dashboard when I can find them.) Anybody think of a better way to do this, let me know.

Anyway, the stories keep coming. This is one. Grade A. Written on one of the most beautiful beaches on the planet, which are all right here in the Hamptons.

Shaking Down Alex

The Virtual World Spills Over into the Real World and Depression Hits

By Dan Rattiner

There was a nice young man making the rounds on TV the other day. His name was Alex, and he had made a million dollars by selling the pixels on his computer screen. For one dollar, you could buy one pixel. There were on his screen one million pixels. And he had advertised them on eBay, getting hundreds of thousands of takers. Who would not be willing to buy a pixel on Alex's computer screen? If Jack Daniels can sell one square foot of land on their Tennessee distillery property to make you a "country squire," surely the enterprising Alex could do the same for pixels in cyberspace.

When I saw him on television, he said he had already sold $880,000 worth of his pixels, leaving him with just $120,000 to go.

The next day, I read that Alex was visited by a bunch of thugs. These hit men had contacted him at his website on the Internet. It was a shake down. They would close him down, they said, by e-mail, by putting computer viruses on his website and sending self-replicating e-mail that would clog his enterprise and choke it to death. Unless he paid them ten cents on the dollar, or $88,000 to start since he had already taken in $880,000. He refused, and he went public with the demand. And so they took him down. Too bad for Alex, although I have since heard he has gotten his site back up due to the diligent efforts of a team of hired computer geeks. Alex has now built firewalls around his site. And has installed virtual sentries on outposts near his site that can warn him of approaching danger so he can sound the alarm.

The virtual world is just like the real world, as it turns out.

My son has told me about another group of criminals who crashed the economy of a virtual world because they cornered the market on a small dog. It's an interesting story.

The virtual world, he said, is called Everquest II. It's a very sophisticated world created on a virtual island where as many as 20,000 real people can take on the identities of dragons or damsels or three-headed snakes or knights and do battle on an island about the size of New Zealand. There are many cities,

John Kastanis, who has been through this kind of financial crisis before. The little belt tightenings are not going to do it. It has to be more than that. Dr. Kastanis must lead the Board into a situation where the loan can be gotten off the backs of this community. Options on the table seem to include merging with another hospital — something they have tried unsuccessfully to do over this past decade — or get together with the bondholders and renegotiate the loan. Perhaps at a lower amount, some of these mortgaged properties can be sold off and the loan paid on the spot (with the draconian pre-payment penalties removed).

It should be pointed out that many of the bondholders are investors, traders and bankers who live in this community. Forgetting for a moment the ethics of hanging onto a few bucks no matter what when our health is at stake, consider what will happen to real estate values here when we become a community without a hospital. Who would consider buying an expensive home in such a community? Estimates about the loss of real estate values tops 40%.

This has to end now. And when it does, we can move on to addressing some of the other medical problems that remain unaddressed because of the paralysis brought on by this loan. For example, Southampton Hospital has not been able to attract any young interns in recent years. They'd love to come. But they cannot afford to live here with these astronomical real estate prices.

There are solutions. The hospital in Aspen, which has the same problem, bought the local Travelodge. And now they have interns, who live there on a subsidized basis. Here in Southampton, it's been suggested that the Tower House, a vacant building owned by the hospital across from the Emergency entrance, be used for that purpose. But it would take money to make that happen. And that money could be had, of course, except there's the interest on this $40 million bond taking up all the available money. As it has for the last ten years. Happy Tenth Anniversary. • towns and villages on this island. Also streams, mountains and gorges. It's a beautiful place.

In this place, there are the good people and the bad people, and when you join the game, you can take an identity as a participant on one side or the other. The battling goes on for days and weeks, even months, and the people on these sides work as teams, even holding strategy sessions and meetings, at which time ideas are put forward, ambushes arranged and various winnings are displayed.

The things you win include swords and knives, breastplates and helmets, horses and, well, dogs. You win them in combat, of course. But you can also trade for them. In exchange you can receive other things, including gold coins, which are divided up into denominations. Where you stand in the community depends upon how much stuff you can get. And of course some things are more expensive than others. A particular small dog, for example, is considered a royal creature. And it has great value.

As the game evolved, another way to obtain riches arrived on the scene. Someone with a lot of stuff who wanted to leave the game went on eBay about five years ago and offered all his virtual possessions up for sale for real money. He got some takers. Soon there was a demand for getting rich in this way. A person — well, a kid — could sign onto the game — take on the trappings of a squire, for example, and then instead of fighting for objects, just go on eBay and buy them. Instantly, his status in the game would be improved over what it had been before. He'd be a Well-to-Do Squire.

I might note that there were even virtual marriages arranged on Everquest II. The marriages were between characters. And children could result. But this is not what the topic of this article is about.

What happened about six months ago was that the entire economy of Everquest II crashed. It was not a computer crash. It was an economic crash. The price of goods and services was going up and up. Nobody knew why. And then it went up so high nobody could afford anything. And the entire game, all the players and everything, suffered through a crash similar to that of the Crash of 1929. Suddenly everybody was poor and without a job or prospects. It was a disaster.

The people who run this game — yes there are people who run Everquest II — could not, at first, figure it out. But then they looked into it. It turned out that one of the players had figured out how to make an exact virtual duplicate of that valuable dog. He would make one and sell it on eBay. Then he'd make another. After that, he'd go on eBay looking to buy the dog. Using the money he had been paid for his bogus dogs, he'd pay a lot for one. And in this way, he drove the price up and up and up, not only for real dogs, but also for his counterfeits, of which he was making more and more.

Pretty soon, he was making dogs all over the place and selling them on eBay (the way this worked, if you were wondering, was you'd get paid real money and then identify yourselves to one another, sign on to the game and there the seller would give the dog to the buyer just as if he had "bought" it on the game. Who could stop this?)

Eventually, after the crash came and there were hundreds of thousands of starving, frightened kids in America who had spent their allowances and were now totally impoverished, the investigators hired by the Everquest II people determined who this counterfeiter was. He was, by that time, the holder of the most dogs and the most virtual money and the most real money who had ever played the game, and he had hired over a dozen people to keep the thing going and share in the loot — and they cut off his membership.

This was an effective means to ending the problem, because to get onto the game to play it, you have to reveal enough information about your real self so you can only go on once per person.

Today, like some wealthy Wall Street crooked financier, this former player is probably living the high life in exile in Switzerland to be near his secret bank accounts — a kid without his parents I suppose, who gets visited once in a while by them — but I am making this part up. No kid wants that. It is better to have mom and dad than any fortune. And so I believe all his riches got dumped.

And that's been the end of it. The federal government, by the way, is not interested in anybody who has been making counterfeit dogs on Everquest II. I mean, it's only a game. •

A Strange Change In the Domestic Habits of Deer in the Hamptons

By Dan Rattiner

There are two opinions about deer. You are either for them or against them. They are either the most beautiful, doe eyed, soulful, graceful animals that ever walked the earth, and they must be coddled and fed expensive salads by hand every morning when they wake up, for which, in exchange, they offer snuggles and licks. Or they are evil, voracious shrubbery-devouring, foul-smelling giant rats that must be exterminated with rifle bullets to the brain as soon as possible. Which side you are on depends on whether you hire landscapers.

Usually, the deer travel in twos. In fact, I can't remember a time before this winter when I ever saw anything but two together. One would dash across the street.

"Better be careful. There's going to be another."

And sure enough, the mate — we all presume it is the mate — comes along shortly thereafter, bounding happily across the road after her beloved. She'll follow him wherever he takes her until the day they do-est part. Or doe-est part.

But this winter is different. Have you noticed this? They aren't in twos. They are in threes. I first noticed the phenomenon on Ferry Road between Sag Harbor and the South Ferry slip. One crossed the road in front of me and then two others followed. I didn't think anything of it. But about a week later, on Highway Behind the Pond in East Hampton, it happened again. First one, then another and another. They went bounding along a front lawn, zigging and zagging to keep clear of whatever they were worried about, and then they crossed the road single file and disappeared into the brush.

Then, a few days later, I saw the same thing one was not a baby or even an adolescent. They were all adults. Hmmm.

My current theories are as follows.

The deer have discovered ménage a trois. It's become the latest rage in Hampton deer-dom. They go off into the woods and rustle about. What fun!

The first deer is the buck, and the last two are the two does. They've discovered Mormonism.

One male has two wives. Next year, who knows, maybe he'll have three. It's a status thing. And what the heck, every time it's just one more mouth to feed, one more cloven hoof to shod. What can I say?

The deer shooting season is just at an end. The third deer has lost his mate to hunters. He (or she) doesn't know what to do. Instincts take over. He (or she) hooks up with another couple. They try and shake him or her, but what can they do? He (or she) keeps following them. It's not like they can throw her (or him) out and lock the door. They don't have doors.

Or how about this? What we have here is a normal buck and doe relationship, with a live-in chauffeur. This is the Hamptons. The chauffeur brings up the rear. Or maybe it's the front.

Perhaps the third deer is their security. He goes on ahead and checks out where they are on Jobs Lane in Bridgehampton. Three, not two. Come to think of it, I have not seen ANY deer this winter traveling in twos. It's all been in threes.

My first thought was that perhaps the first two were the parents, and the last one was their child. But they were the same size. Perhaps a grown son, unable to get himself out of the house? The next time it happened, I looked at the markings. They were all the same. The third

RESCUE AT SEA...MADE FOR TELEVISION

By David Stoll

Few people on earth are as tough and brave as those in the 106th Rescue Wing of the Air National Guard. This famous unit, located at the Gabreski Airport in Westhampton, is trained to rescue military personnel in combat situations, and is also available to rescue commercial and recreational boaters. The unit was dispatched to New York and Washington following the September 11 terrorist attacks, and was depicted in the book and movie The Perfect Storm, a true story about the 1994 storm that took not only a swordfish fishing boat and its crew far out in the northern Atlantic but also a 106th Rescue Wing airman and helicopter during a rescue attempt of that boat and the successful rescue of a sailboat near the New Jersey shore.

The gripping, adrenalin-pumping book conveys a sense of the talent and heroism of the 106th unit's personnel, but those looking for a visual depiction aside from the movie can tune into "The Best and Worst of Fred Barta" on the Outdoor Life Network to watch a rescue simulation. That show is an extreme sports version of fishing and hunting TV shows. Although most episodes depict real excursions, the episode entitled "Rescue at Sea" features Barta's fishing boat in a staged disaster, requiring a rescue by the 106th Rescue Wing. The unit participated, using the event as a training mission and an opportunity to inform the public about its work.

In the episode, Barta's boat "sinks" miles from shore. The crew gets into the boat's life raft, deploys a satellite beacon, and waits to be rescued. Soon, a C130 airplane arrives and drops three men into the water, along with a more stable rubber boat. An HH-60 Pavehawk helicopter then arrives. The men in the water help the crew get into the rubber boat and tie a cable from the helicopter to the boat. The helicopter then hoists the boat to safety. The depiction is an accurate rendition of what could really happen.

The episode first aired during the weekend of January 27. It will be re-aired on Friday, February 17, at 9 p.m., and early Saturday, February 18, at 1 a.m. The Outdoor Life Network can be found at Channel 408 on Cablevision.

going. Makes sure the coast is clear. Then whistles silently (that high whistle we can't hear) and surreptitiously waves them on with his hoof.

This is three female deer, on the hunt, out to rob some banks. Bonnie and Claudette and Helga.

This is three bucks, out looking for some trouble. Maybe shake down a squirrel.

The third deer has been placed there by the car fender repair industry. He is in their employ and has been brainwashed to believe that if he gives up his life, he will go to heaven and cavort with 15 virgins.

So this is what happens. "Look out for the deer! Just missed. That was close. Now slow down for the second. There she goes. Okay the coast is clear." WHAM!

Killer Bees

Are the Bridgehampton Killer Bees Headed for Another State Title?

By David Lion Rattiner

A packed stadium with screaming, wild fans is not something you think of when you think of the quaint little town of Bridgehampton. But then again, you wouldn't think that this town, with its tiny high school enrollment (there are only 38 students) fields one of the most winningest basketball teams in the entire state of New York, either. If you haven't heard about it already, the Bridgehampton High School basketball team, known as the Killer Bees, is doing some impressive work this year too, or, in other words, they keep on winning. But the real story about this team is not the tradition that they bring, the discipline that they teach or the inspiration that they give. It is about their ability to consistently, year after year, draw crowds of thousands, yes, you read that right, thousands to cheer them on to State championships. They've won eight in the last twenty-six years. And this year looks like they might win a ninth.

The Killer Bees are an exciting team to watch, but the crowds that come to watch this team are unlike anything that high school sports on the East End can create. The feeling that you can get going to a Killer Bees game is similar to that of going to a football game in a college town.

Coach Carl Johnson, the veteran coach of the Killer Bees for the past fifteen years and who also played for Southampton College during his playing days, is very optimistic about the team that he has this year. "Our team this year is

School on Tuesday. The only team that the Killer Bees have lost to is Pierson in Sag Harbor, but that was after three injuries to the team's top players plagued the team. On February 7, the Bees are going to be at full strength and will get to face Pierson on their home turf. "That is going to be a game you won't want to miss. It can get pretty exciting during those types of games," says Coach Johnson.

Games are commonly sold out and many times are standing room only. The piercing screams after every point made or missed can be heard even outside the walls of the brick school building and when a game goes to overtime, well you can just forget about it. "If you come to a game you'll understand how exciting it is. We have kids in grade school coming to the games that look to the high school players as heroes. We had a game against Greenport this season that went into overtime that we won. You would not believe how crazy that was," Coach Johnson said.

Coach Carl Johnson got into coaching basketball at Bridgehampton after graduating from college and became an assistant coach. He then was recommended as the varsity coach very, very strong."

Coach Johnson and his assistant coach Ronnie White certainly are not messing around. The Killer Bees as of press time are boasting a 7 and 1 win/loss record. By the time you are reading this, they will most likely be enjoying an 8-1 record after they play the Ross

Tug O'War?

LIU Moves MFA Writing Program to Brooklyn. But Will the Writers Go?

By Christian McLean

It all started with a letter. It arrived in the mail, in a non-descript, tan envelope. Inside was a tan sheet of paper with black letterhead. Long Island University had something to say. It was a form letter. "Dear MFA Student," it began. It was impersonal, as impersonal as an out-of-town physician offering a life-condemning diagnosis. "Dear MFA Student," not "Dear Tom," or Dear Ms. Smith." Although there are only a dozen or so students left in the MFA program, the idea to address the letters to actual people clearly seems never to have crossed their minds. The letters should have read, "Dear $15,000 a year," but LIU has never been that honest or straight forward.

The letter was from a man most had never heard of, yet alone seen, in their years at Southampton College, despite his being the Dean of Graduate Programs. It was an invitation to an "informal" meeting about the students' future. It was an announcement that the MFA Writing Program was moving from Southampton to Brooklyn. The letter started off with fond wishes for the New Year and then the bomb was dropped.

E-mails circulated and fear ran high within the program. Rumors that professors had already resigned from LIU and had taken up faculty positions at Stony Brook were bounced around from one hotmail account to another. Everyone wanted to know what was going to happen to the local professors, what was going to happen to the campus, and what was going to happen to them.

And so the students all went to the informal meeting. Like orphans in a war, huddled together in Southampton's Chancellor Hall awaiting more information about their future, the MFA students sat in the stale light of the room, staring out the floor to ceiling windows into the blackness. They were treated like Girl Scouts on a class trip to the Pentagon. Most questions were answered with comments like,

BRAS, PANTIES AND BOXER SHORTS ON PARADE

By Debbie Tuma

If you're looking to spice up your life in the dead of winter in the Hamptons, one of the best off-season parties is the annual "Love, Life and Lingerie" fashion show that is coming up on February 9 at the Southampton Publick House.

Besides having a great time watching local men and women parade around in gorgeous evening wear from "Top Drawer" boutique in East Hampton and indulging in food and drink, you will be donating to a worthwhile East End charity, the South Fork Breast Health Coalition. All money raised will go to their "Neighbors Helping Neighbors" program, which provides financial support, transportation, and support groups to local people with breast cancer. It also helps with integrative oncology for those going through chemotherapy.

Susan Barry Roden, President and Founder of the South Fork Breast Health Coalition, said this will be an extra special party, since her group is celebrating their 10-year anniversary. "Over the past ten years, we have helped many people with this disease, and our goal this year is to raise $20,000," she said. "Our motto is, 'You're Not Alone,' and we try to help as many people as we can." Although it is rare, men can develop breast cancer as well.

She said that in honor of their big anniversary, her group will also have "bigger and better" prizes this year for their Chinese auction, which in the past has included dinners in local restaurants, overnight stays at local hotels and inns, spa treatments, merchandise from local stores, and gift baskets of all kinds. Tickets for this auction are available during the party at the Southampton Publick House.

The fashion show is always a great time with

WHO WILL HELP JASMINE CHAMBERLAIN?

By Debbie Tuma

For 11-year-old Jasmine Chamberlain, an outpouring of care and support from her classmates and community members in Sag Harbor helped her to cope with a tough turn of events this past week.

Last Wednesday, her 32 year-old mother, Elizabeth, died suddenly of a brain aneurysm. This follows the death of her father, Jesse, seven years ago. Jasmine has continued to live in Sag Harbor with her godmother, Pallas Pidgeon, since the loss of her mother.

Elizabeth Chamberlain was well known in the local community from working several jobs at the Espresso store in Sag Harbor, at Hampton Coffee Company in Water Mill, and at the Hess Station in Water Mill.

Until his death, when Jasmine was only four, her father Jesse Chamberlain was a musician and house painter. He and Elizabeth, whose family is from Honduras, met in California, got married, and had Jasmine in Santa Fe, before moving to the Hamptons when Jasmine was about two.

Jesse's father and Jasmine's grandfather is artist John Chamberlain, who lives in Shelter Island, and who has exhibited widely around the world, and is now in his eighties. But the question remains as to where Jasmine will live, since she wants to finish her school year with her friends in sixth grade at Pierson Middle School. But some of her mother's relatives also want to take her with them to live in Los Angeles, California.

Last Sunday, Jasmine was seated in her upstairs bedroom at Pallas Pidgeon's home, surrounded by stuffed animals, and boxes of cards and letters of love and support from her many friends and supporters.

"It feels so good to know that so many people care, and I really like this village, where all my friends are," said Jasmine, who sat next to a framed picture of her holding a basket and standing next to her smiling mother during an Easter egg hunt in Mashashamuet Park, several years ago.

When asked if she aspires to be a great artist like her grandfather, Jasmine said she'd prefer to write magazine articles, or be an actress, a model, or do something in the fashion business.

"My friends say I'm outspoken, and they tell me I'd make a good actress," she said today. "Besides acting, I like dancing and drawing, and my favorite class is physical education. My favorite sports are swimming, basketball and soccer." She is looking forward to an upcoming school ski trip, where she hopes to learn snow boarding.

A special fund has been set up through North Fork Bank in Sag Harbor to help with Jasmine's expenses and further education. Anyone who would like to contribute to this child's future can send a check to: Jasmine Chamberlain, c/o North Fork Bank, P.O. Box 2699, Sag Harbor, New York 11963.

lots of laughter, as people watch everyone from their local teachers and business owners to their local politicians parading around in lingerie. In past years, there has also been lingerie from other local stores, including Billings of Southampton. When the fashion show starts, everyone lines up at the foot of the stairs as the male and female models walk down and show off their attire. Many of the men model smoking jackets and pajamas, and the women model everything from nightgowns to peignoir sets.

This year, Roden said special guest speakers will be Congressman Tim Bishop (a former fashion model himself at this event) and Southampton Town Councilman Chris Nuzzi. Other past models at this event have included NYS Assemblyman Fred Thiele, Gurney's Public Relations Director Ingrid Lemme, Dan Rattiner, Bishop's press aid Jane Finalborgo, and several local reporters, including myself.

At this upcoming party, music will be provided by "Sounds Incredible," and there will be a deejay and dancing. The Southampton Publick House always puts out a spread of tasty hors d'oeuvres, and tickets also include free wine and beer. This party often gets packed with a few hundred people, so it's a good idea to buy tickets beforehand. They are available at several locations and at the Southampton Publick House, Katena's Market in Southampton, and at the Southampton Hospital Breast Health Center, at $40 each.

At this center, they advise women to come get their mammograms, which can help save lives with early detection. They have the latest, state of the art medical equipment and dedicated x-ray machines. The Ellen P. Hermanson Foundation, which sponsors "Ellen's Run" each summer, has funded new mammography equipment and a mammatome breast biopsy system. They now offer computer assisted diagnosis, an additional tool for analyzing mammograms, and there are a number of support groups available through the hospital for breast cancer survivors. Who's Here

By Christian McLean

You know a writer is a breed apart when he can produce a captivating novel about the Hamptons without sex, murder, or a long walk on the beach. Roger Rosenblatt skates very close at points, dropping in a skinny dipping scene and someone getting clipped by a Rolls Royce, but even those passages are completely asymptomatic of the "Hamptons book" genre. His first novel, Lapham Rising, proves that one can be playful and charming, albeit as satirical as humanly possible, when approaching what has become such a drone subject in literature. Not since Fitzgerald's "A Diamond as Big as the Ritz" has a writer tackled the faults of ultimate wealth in such a unique way. For some of Rosenblatt's part-time admirers, this new fiction may come as a bit of a surprise, but for those who know him, who have followed his work through the years, from The New Republic to his play, Ashley Montana Goes Ashore in the Caicos, Lapham Rising seems like just another razor sharp arrow in his seemingly bottomless literary quiver. It's as much Rosenblatt as "The Man in the Water" and "The Quality of Mercy Killing." In some ways it is more so. After all, the novel, in part, has been brewing inside him for almost half a century.

Not since Fitzgerald's "A Diamond as Big as the Ritz" has a writer tackled the faults of ultimate wealth in such a unique way.

Born in 1940, Rosenblatt grew up in the Gramercy Park district of New York City. He was the eldest of two boys and the son of a doctor. His father, Milton Rosenblatt, was a practical man, and although he desired to be a journalist himself (writing two books on medicine), he saw that as an internist, he fared much better at supporting his family and providing them with a comfortable life. His father's choice also offered the Rosenblatt family the opportunity to summer on the South Fork. They rented homes throughout the Hamptons, spending most of their time at the beach and outdoors as most families did in the pre-benefit-to-raise-money-gala days. Among the potato fields and sunburns, in this nostalgic, simple summer existence, the seeds of Lapham Rising were unknowingly planted.

As he grew older, busied with college and career, the summer vacations came to an end and it would not be until 1980 that Rosenblatt and his wife, Ginny, returned to the Hamptons with their own children. He was different, the Hamptons were different and the reminiscent in English and American Literature. He started out wanting to be a poet. But while in a class taught by Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Robert Lowell, which he humbly claims he has no idea how he had been accepted to in the first place, Rosenblatt became aware that he was surrounded by people who had embraced the idea that their lives would be packed with no recognition, no economic return, nothing but a hum-drum existence of having the occasional poem published, and eventually dying, only then, if ever, being recognized for their contributions to their field. Roger was looking for something else, something a bit higher profile.

Rosenblatt stayed on with Harvard until 1973, teaching writing and modern literature. During that time, he received the honor of being the youngest house master in Harvard's history, at only 29 years of age. The following two years he spent as director for the National Endowment for the Humanities in Washington D.C. In 1975, his father passed away, and he was also invited to become the literary editor at The New Republic. The two things were connected.

With his father deceased, Roger was partially freed from the practical career of academia and was presented with a life as a writer. It was then, at The New Republic, that Rosenblatt tabled his plans for poetry and novels, and applied his skills to the glossy page. His inaugural essay, "Introduction to the Reader," deals with the death of his father, but more so with his father's life and place with Roger. It is a touching, detailed portrayal of parents of the post-war generation. For the public, the essay was also an introduction to the writer, hinting at the currents that moved him, of childhood, of family, of a long desire to write.

Success came in bundles, placing Roger in the thick of the magazine world. His work at Time magazine made him one of the most recognized writers of the 80s and heralded him as an innovator in his field. The theme of childhood and family are approached time and again, but not more sharply than in his 1982 piece "Children of War" (later turned into a full-length book). The article examined the influence of war on adolescents in places like Belfast, Lebanon, and Cambodia. What came of it was hope, that despite being engulfed in bloody conflict, losing parents and siblings, and being wounded themselves, children forced into adulthood, as a whole,

TWENTYSOMETHING... By DAVID LION RATTINER

We Are All Wimps

I have decided that I am one of the biggest wimps on the planet. For the past five years, I have been talking with my small circle of friends about going skydiving at some point in our lives. We talk about it at least five times a year, how we should all just take a weekend, climb into an airplane, fly into the air and then jump out of it. Of course, I have never actually done this, because I don't want to die.

My friends are a lot of talk, when it comes to skydiving. They'll act like they can't wait to go and wonder what the five-year hold up is, and, of course, I act like I can't wait to go either, even though I've really just been stalling for the past five years.

This has been a pretty simple dance of fake enthusiasm and real fear. But I recently got a call from a buddy of mine that sent a wave of depression through my body. It was from my friend John, who now lives and works in Washington D.C.

Dave, you aren't going to believe this.

If this has anything to do with doing something stupid after a night of drinking, I'll believe it.

No, man. My sister Teresa, she went skydiving.

Your little sister?

Yeah.

Did she make it?

Yes, of course. Dude we have to go. I've seen the pictures of her, it looks so cool.

Oh, yeah, definitely. We will definitely go skydiving.

I'm such a liar it is pathetic. I'm never going to jump out of an airplane. I flipped my cell phone shut in disbelief. I felt like such a wimp.

It's not like I ever planned on actually going skydiving, it is just the fact that somebody else that I knew actually went ahead and did it. The thing about skydiving, for me anyway, is the whole death part. I'm not really afraid of heights or airplanes, but I can tell you that I am very afraid of that chute not opening. I can't imagine how depressing it must be to be up in the middle of the atmosphere having a great time and then pulling on that ripcord only to find out that the chute won't open. What emotion does that stir? If that happened to me, I would get on my cell phone and call my buddy's sister, and right before I hit the ground to go splat, I would say, "This is all your fault!" Then I would start singing the lyrics to the song, "Freefalling" by Tom Petty.

I don't get the tandem argument. I have had friends that have told me that they would only go skydiving if they had an instructor attached to them. The logic is that if your chute doesn't open at least you won't die alone. Oh yeah, this makes a whole lot of sense. I'm sure that death, like dining out, is much more enjoyable when you have someone to go with.

As if the day couldn't get any wimpier, I received another phone call, this one from my friend Jim who lives in Boston. He screamed into the telephone how great of a movie Brokeback Mountain was. I told him that I already felt wimpy enough today and that I was not going to see the movie. People are so weird these days. They are jumping out of airplanes and watching movies about cowboys falling in love. Not that there is anything wrong with that.

I think that I could use a little bit more danger in my life. When I think about it, the most dangerous thing that I do during the day is a tie between driving my car to work and using a public toilet. Adding a little danger in life is exciting; that is the whole reason that people go skydiving in the first place. It makes you appreciate being alive more than you normally would. I think that my problem is that I appreciate being alive most of the time. For me, it's the little things in life, like the snooze button on my alarm clock, that do it for me.

Will I ever go skydiving? Probably not. But I can tell you this, I'll be pretending that I want to go until I kick the bucket. When that happens, then you can throw me out of a perfectly good airplane, but I still want to go with an instructor.

"We can't comment" or "We'll get back to you." The idea of students transferring to Stony Brook was skirted nicely, with something to the effect of "You'll have to speak to Stony Brook." If anything, the meeting, which was supposed to calm the students, heightened their fears instead.

So the informal meeting, spawned by a form letter, was heavily weighted with informal answers. Robert Reeves, head of the MFA Writing Program, resigned and is now part of Stony Brook University. Roger Rosenblatt followed suit. This wasn't explained in the meeting, though. The two are working with Stony Brook to start a new writing program at Southampton College, under the Stony Brook banner, as early as fall 2006. They are working on a way to accept the credits of LIU students wanting to transfer, but it's currently all in flux because LIU has yet to actually sell the campus to Stony Brook.

Students worry if all their credits will transfer — whether they should take this semester's courses if the credits will be voided. For many of them the commute to Brooklyn is out of the question. They live and work on the East End. Getting from Sag Harbor to Brooklyn for a 5 p.m. class is almost impossible. They have children, they have families. The same goes for professors, but their options are even more limited. Stony Brook already has an English department. They have professors that can teach literature and 18th century American poetry at the new Southampton school. It seems the general consensus among students is to jump ship, and that may work just fine — there may be space for all of them on the life rafts, but intelligent, talented professors may have to swim for it, or even worse, go down with the ship.

To stay with LIU is like staying with an abusive spouse. To be beaten time and time again, to be made to feel worthless and be made to feel like LIU is the only one who is willing to care about them. It's a painstaking decision. Is no job better than being paid to be treated like nothing?

Like a charity case? Once again LIU has placed the people that made Southampton College a writing Mecca in a precarious situation. As students and faculty members drift about in limbo awaiting some information about their futures, they can send queries to Charles Hitchcock, Dean of Graduate Programs, where they can await informal answers like, "We'll have to get back to you."

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #384 Frey Fray

The author James Frey lied in his best selling book A Million Little Pieces. Oprah Winfrey did the best thing she could when she realized she was duped. She acknowledged it and asked for pardon. Americans can handle the truth, whatever it is, and wherever it takes us, but we hate deceit. Deceit is a specific type of lie that embezzles our loyalty, sympathy, or money under false pretenses. For this, Americans will either kill you or put you in the White House.

Deceit is not to be confused with other types of lying. Example, if Frey had lied about his IQ, no one would care because we had no investment in it. It's still a lie, but it doesn't cost us anything either way, which puts in the "white lie" category. Frey's mistake was putting down in writing facts that were easily disproved, like saying he was in jail for 87 days when it turned out to be 3 hours. Lesson #1: Don't put lies on paper...unless you attach someone else's name to it!

Lying is not terrible. Deceit is. We've all had to lie our asses off at some point in our lives to prevent a crisis. I have a clear memory of lying to a boss for a coworker to prevent a big problem for her. I hated doing it and I let her know later (but I lied so well, the boss reassigned the task to me!).

Lesson #2: When speaking of things of which you have absolutely no knowledge, you must sound completely calm and certain. Lying to family and loved ones is essential to familial harmony. These are what I call the 'pink fuzzy lies'. If your hubby wants to know if you still think he's "a hunka hunka burnin' love," the answer must always be yes. Just as he must never mention weight gain, new hair color, foo foo bed pillows, et. al. To all these, his answer must be, "I love it!"

Lesson #3: If you love me, tell me pink fuzzy lies. Addendum: this does not extend to any lies told to cover broken commandments. Those lies fall in the deceit category and are usually very expensive.

Teenagers lie as a rule, but for some reason, parents feel compelled to respond with the truth. LIE: "Sorry about the car, Dad. My friend Tommy was driving without my permission."

TRUTH: "That's gonna cost me $800 to repair, son."

LIE: "I'm really sorry. I'll pay for the damage. I'll get a part time job after school."

TRUTH: "No son, just get good grades and don't let anyone else but you drive the car."

LIE: "I promise, Dad. I love you. You're a great guy."

Lesson #3: You only have to give as much truth as you get. There's a Turkish saying, "He who tells the truth had better have one foot in a stirrup." The truth must only be told sparingly and with great care. Breaking someone's delusion can be very painful. I have a really pretty size 14, Diane von Furstenburg bathing suit in my underwear drawer. It's been there for more than 20 years and still has the Neiman's tag on it. If I need to hear any truth about that, I'll let you know.

Lesson #4: Truths and lies can live peacefully side by side. There's a French saying, "In goes the

WENDY WASSERSTEIN, 55

The passing of New York playwright Wendy Wasserstein is a great blow to American theatre. At only 55 years of age, she lost a terrible bout with lymphoma. Her works, such as The Heidi Chronicles, have been credited with giving contemporary women a true voice on stage, no longer a voice written by men. Wasserstein was able to deal with the complex matters of gender, sexuality, and cultural issues in an approachable and entertaining way. Her use of non-traditional casting and a conscious effort to create characters of different races and ethnicities was an example to the theatre community as a whole.

Wendy Wasserstein received a B.A. from Mount Holyoke College (similar to the characters in Uncommon Women) and an M.F.A. from Yale School of Drama in 1976 where she studied with classmate Christopher Durang. Besides plays, Wasserstein wrote a novel, two books of essays and a spoof self-help book, Sloth. She received a Pulitzer Prize and a Tony for The Heidi Chronicles – the first woman to win the Tony for playwriting. She was often a visitor to the Hamptons.

She is survived by her seven-year-old daughter; her mother, Lola; a sister, Georgette Levis; and her brother, Bruce Wasserstein. She was pre-deceased by a sister, Sandra W. Meyer of East Hampton and Manhattan.

and has been doing it ever since. Now he walks around Bridgehampton as a local celebrity with people congratulating him and wishing him good luck in the middle of the street.

The Killer Bee starting team this year is a relatively mixed group of boys with two sophomores, two juniors and two seniors. Sean Harris and Jay Cherry, both seniors, lead the team as captains. Juniors Corey Morris and Brandon LaPointe, along with sophomores Terrence Hires and Irving Fayman, all have their eyes and hearts dead set on a league title and a state championship.

The last time that the Killer Bees won a state championship was in 1998. The last time they won a league championship was in 2000. "We are due for one," says

Coach Johnson.

During the 70s the team didn't go a year without a league title. It was during this time that the tradition of winning at basketball in Bridgehampton began. Should the Bees win the league, then they are automatically qualified for the county championship and also the state championships. "Winning the state championship is far away right now, but it is definitely in my mind with these boys playing," says Coach Johnson.

wine, out comes the truth." This is so true — and sometimes it's a good thing, like if you need to know who's in their will. But it can be a bad thing, like if they ask to use your cell phone to cancel the hit they put out on you.

Lesson #5: When using a martini to uncover a lie, be careful not to choke on the olive of truth. I was talking with a great gal, Meghan Lang, the other day. (She's looking for Island recipes for a cookbook for PTSA. If you have a recipe to share, contact her at P.O. Box 1035, Shelter Island, 11964, e-mail: mamalang@optonline.net. Meghan was telling me about her grandmother from Ireland who lived to be 92. I said, "She must've had great stories." And she responded, "Yeah, and they got better every time she told 'em." Now, was her sainted grandmother lying? Never! The Irish don't lie. We just decorate the truth a little each time we tell it.

Which brings us back to Mr. Frey, which I think is an Irish name... Mr. Frey just lost his way. If he'd kept his addiction story in a bottle of Bushnell's, it would have gotten better with time and Oprah and I wouldn't be mad at him.

Lesson #6 Truth is in the ear of the beholder.

although haunted, were surprisingly positive.

While he was at Time, the Rosenblatt family came to East Hampton, Robert and Ginny and Carl, Amy, and John, their three children. They stayed for a 10-day summer vacation. The next year, they spent the summer in Bridgehampton. Not the social butterfly he appears, Roger yearned for something quieter and more removed from the hustle and bustle of South-to-East Hampton life. His daughter, who was working at a tennis club in Quogue recommended that he visit that sleepy village before writing off the South Fork completely. They fell in love with the charm and character of the place. It was more their speed. And eleven years ago Roger and Ginny purchased an 1880s farmhouse, ironically originally the home of a New York doctor.

Rosenblatt has written thousands of articles for Time, Vanity Fair (which he credits with helping pay the mortgage on the house in Quogue), Family Circle, and Men's Journal. He has produced ten books, including: Black Fiction, Witness: The World Since Hiroshima, Life Itself: Abortion in the American Mind, Coming Apart: A Memoir of the Harvard Wars of 1969, Children of War, Rules For Aging, and now Lapham Rising.

It is rather interesting that Roger Rosenblatt's career has been defined and rewarded (two George Polk Awards and a Robert F. Kennedy Book Prize) by his writings on such serious subjects when, in person, he is anything but. The modest, self-deprecating writer, now in his sixties, jokes incessantly about himself, his work, and his life (noting that his press-release biography is his best piece of fiction yet). It is in this man, not the groundbreaking essayist, whom we find at the heart of Lapham Rising. To say he has only tackled serious subject matter prior to this novel would be inaccurate. His one man show Free Speech in America, and the book Rules for Aging are delightful, entertaining, and far from staid. But the new novel progresses even further into hilarity and absurdity.

Lapham Rising was born in the Hamptons, from Rosenblatt's pastoral childhood in Southampton to his present life in Quogue. The talking, born-again Evangelical, West Highland Terrier named Hector is based on his own Westie, Hector (although he does not speak, and his belief in God is still under review). The story is about Harry March, a local writer, who has taken up arms against the changes in the Hamptons; damning the homes, the egos, the cars, and everything that comes with the gentrification of the already gentrified. But it isn't simply the wealthy that are focused on in this satire, the Native Americans, the Ladies' Village Improvement Society, real estate agents, doctors and an entire village of wannabe writers, all find their place in the world of Lapham Rising. You read on, wondering when Harry March is going to declare that the day laborers who are posted in front of the 7-Eleven be fed to the elderly as a way of nipping both the problem of illegal workers and the meals on wheels program in the bud. It never goes that far, but it is fairly unforgiving as March fights tooth and nail against all "progress" east of Riverhead, but particularly in Quogue where his neighbor, Lapham, is constructing a 36,000 square foot mansion.

Roger Rosenblatt is not Harry March, but it is here, in Quogue, where Rosenblatt spends much of his time, even winters. For ten years he has been a writing professor for the MFA program at Long Island University's Southampton College. And this fall he will be a writing professor for MFA program at Stony Brook University's Southampton College. He has been an integral part of the Summer Writer's Conference as well, helping turn it into one of the most highly praised in the nation. But what gives Rosenblatt the most joy is reliving the summers of his childhood with his wife, three children and four grandchildren. He beams when he speaks about them. As if far surpassing the Emmy he received for writing and performing his essays on "NewsHour with Jim Lehrer" and the Robert F. Kennedy Book Prize, building a sandcastle with his grandchildren stands as the greatest monument to his life.

going to star together in the upcoming Broadway play Don't Follow Me, I'm Lost Too. No production dates are set for the Douglas Carter Beane play about a husband-and-wife gossip-column team who work at a New York City tabloid.

Amy Fisher, Joey Buttafuoco and Mary Jo Buttafuoco have all agreed to be reunited on national television sometime this spring. The Long Island Lolita, her former auto mechanic lover and his jilted wife have not been in the same room together since Fisher's trial for shooting Mary Jo in the face. The show's producer, David Krieff, promised "surprising revelations," but assured the whole affair would be "classy." And how could it not be when all persons involved are being paid for their appearance?

And you thought zoning laws on the East End were strict. Hamptons regular Paul McCartney has been ordered to tear down a log cabin on his estate in England. Authorities said that the cabin disrupts the natural character and nature of the landscape.

East Ender Jann Wenner, editor-in-chief of Rolling Stone magazine, should be expecting some backlash in the future. The magazine's next cover features rapper Kanye West wearing a crown of thorns with the title "The Passion of Kanye West." This all makes sense, of course, since being a Grammy winning, millionaire rap artist is comparable to shouldering the sins of all mankind.

The Second Annual issue of Ultimate Homes Magazine recently hit newsstands and it should come as no surprise that on a list of the 1,000 most expensive homes for sale in the U.S., 107 are in the Hamptons. 176 are in Manhattan. The most expensive home for sale in the Hamptons is Three Ponds Farm, a $75 million, 25,000 square foot Bridgehampton estate that comes with its own USGA rated golf course.

This week there's been much ado at The Retreat, the East Hampton center that provides support and counseling for victims of domestic violence. First, the organization has been awarded $5000 from the Bank of America Charitable Foundation to integrate a Financial Self-Sufficiency curriculum into its residential program. Secondly, Tracey Lutz, Executive Director of The Retreat, has been selected as the 2006 recipient of the Henry D. Pearson, Jr. Memorial Award by the United Way of Long Island. The annual award is given in honor of a person's outstanding work in the field of human services.

A PINK SHOWER

Dianne Bernhard and O. Aldan James hosted a baby shower for Oprah Winfrey's favorite niece, Chrishaundra Lee, and her husband Jason Perez at The National Arts Club in NYC. Dianne had the club decorated with beautiful flowers and a charming array of pink baby clothes that dangled with pink bunnies from cords throughout the club. The outrageously funny Sinthea Starr (Joel Vig) entertained the proud parents to be and kept the guests roaring with laughter. Russ Kassoff provided piano accompaniment, and Mary Bond Davis sang a special lullaby for the young couple. Baby Perez's shower was Registered at Bye Bye Baby.

Protest During State Of The Union

A Large Gathering Of People Got Together Banging Pots And Drums In Greenport

By R.B. Stuart

Activist group "The World Can't Wait" has spent the last month sending out mass e-mails, attempting to organize a protest against President Bush's Tuesday night State of The Union Address. Their goal is to organize people in the US to take responsibility and stop the course led by the Bush administration. Stating, "We seek to create a political situation where the Bush administration's program is repudiated, where Bush himself is driven from office, and where the whole direction he has been taking U.S. society is reversed. We seek to mobilize millions to express their outrage, to speak the truth, to act with urgency and form an organized political resistance.. We reach out to people who have been fooled by Bush, and to those who have been most seriously affected by the outrages inflicted by the Bush administration."

Another group, known as "Defeat Liberal Lunacy" was organized and headed out Tuesday night to protest the protesters.

World Can't Wait drew their inspiration from another organization called "Not in Our Name" whose mission is: "No election, whether fair or fraudulent, can legitimize criminal wars on foreign countries, torture, the wholesale violation of human rights, and the end of science and reason."

The Long Island chapter of "The World Can't Wait" was organized by two veteran activists, Melanie Mitzer and Nicke Gorney of Greenport. Tuesday night's peaceful demonstration began at 8:30 p.m. at Mitchell Park in Greenport; nearly 30 demonstrators participated in the rainy protest. The crowd was encouraged to bring noisemakers; drums, pots and pans were all present to display their anger towards the Bush administration. The group was led by Maggie Gentle Bear, a Native American who began with a drumming circle and was later joined in by a group of percussionists, blowing whistles and horns.

Since 2003 Mitzer and Gorney with a handful of others had been gathering every Saturday in Mitchell Park to protest the invasion of Iraq. They felt it was important to show people that they did not support it and wanted to open up a dialogue. Then last year after Bush was re-elected the partners launched a website, www.thegroovymind.com. "We were so disillusioned with the path this country would take and all the corruption we decided to do something we believed in, something that would make a difference in the world. We felt, in a world out of balance we don't have to feel powerless, a world with unfair free trade policies, rampant corruption, hawkish for the sake of oil and an appalling record of environmental pollution. So we thought if we were to develop a site where people can buy organic, Fair Trade and eco-friendly products, that all of us could make a difference in the world," Mitzer explained.

The grassroots movement of World Can't Wait has attracted many celebrity activists, amongst them Susan Sarandon, Ed Asner, Harry Belafonte, Jane Fonda and Tim Robbins. Along with an eclectic mix of advisory board members such as writer Gore Vidal, historians, pro-choice activists, hip hop performers, professors, attorneys along with California State Assemblyman, Mark Leno.

Obviously World Can't Wait will attract more than just supporters, for hours prior to the demonstration, Mitzer and Gorney received an e-mail from a conservative group called Defeat Liberal Lunacy, Chaired by Bob Alino. They notified them that they would be bringing a large PA system to drown them out.

The group ended up being a no-show however, which gave a sigh of relief for some of the protesters and a sigh of disappointment for the protesters who were looking for a little rivalry.

Who would have thought that a little town on the North Fork would bring to life so many politically active individuals. A little protesting can sometimes make a difference.

Ice Skating, Riding A Carousel And Greenport

The Winter Wonderland of the North Fork Has A Playground For Kids And Adults

By Stephanie Regina

As you cruise down Route 25 on the North Fork passing sleepy farms that are waiting for spring, wineries and seemingly deserted buildings overcome by the hush of winter, you eventually reach a quaint little seaside town known as Greenport. Greenport is the home of the Mitchell Park outdoor ice rink and glass-enclosed carousel. Believe it or not, it is full of life even during these cold and lazy months.

The ice rink, which is currently open for its first full season of operation, is conveniently situated adjacent to the already well known and loved carousel and attracts people from all over the Island, even the world, who are looking for a pleasant way to spend a brisk afternoon. Though it's not quite regulation size, Mitchell Park Assistant Manager Ben Heins says the rink is approximately 70 feet wide and 140 feet long. "The important thing is that it's big enough to have a good ride on the Zamboni," Heins said.

Depending on the weather, the rink is installed in November, and broken down in March to be stored for the year. During those four months, about eight miles of hose is laid three inches beneath the rink and runs all the way into a building on Main Street a block away. Because it takes three weeks for the water to freeze initially, the antifreeze is pumped even at night and on days the rink is closed. But that isn't what creates that wonderland-white color; there is actually a layer of ice that is painted white underneath a second layer of ice.

For seven dollars (or five if you have your own skates or are under 18), skaters can enjoy unlimited skating time for the day. Skaters can be seen sailing around on the ice against the backdrop of the Peconic

Bay and the magnificent glass structure that houses the carousel. The mood is enhanced by the sound of classic instrumental songs such as The Nutcracker, and others that are generally known as winter favorites. In fact, it's the atmosphere that seems to draw visitors.

"I love skating here because it's prettier than Rockefeller Center and the ice is so much smoother," said Laura Palm, who goes to college in Pennsylvania, but is originally from Germany.

"I thought this would be a nice place to take Laura, so she could experience the seaside-village atmosphere," said Laura's friend, Leslie Thompson, who lives in Staten Island, but often comes out to visit her mother in Southold. "I'm just sorry the carousel is closed today."

The Mitchell Park Carousel, which closes periodically for refurbishing and is expected to be open again in early February, is generally operational from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. on weekends and holidays during winter months and every day during the summer. It was built in the 1920s and was donated to the Village of Greenport by Northrop Grumman in 1995. Even within the village it continued to travel; it was first located for three years in a shipyard building on Carpenter Street, later it was moved to the red barn on Third and Front streets where it remained for three years and since June 2001 it has been prominently on display in its glass pavilion in Mitchell Park, showing off its antique charm to the public. For a dollar, children and adults alike can enjoy a ride on the carousel and try to capture a brass ring in order to win a free ride.

Mitchell Park is also home to a camera obscura – a late 19th century-style device housed in a dark room that reflects images of the town on a sunny day. For a dollar per view, visitors can see the bay, the skaters, and the streets reflected like photographs in dazzlingly bright colors. The camera obscura will be opening in February.

The park bustles a little extra on Wednesday, Thursday, and Sunday nights when adult hockey leagues occupy the rink from 7:30 p.m. on, at which times enthusiastic spectators crowd around the rink. There is also a youth hockey league that meets on Tuesday evenings at 4 p.m., and figure skating takes place on Sunday mornings.

The rink is open to the public Wednesdays and Thursdays from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m., Fridays from 4 p.m. to 9 p.m., Saturdays from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m., and Sundays from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. It is closed Mondays and Tuesdays. For more information about park operations, call (631) 477-2200, or visit www.greenportvillage.com.

North Fork Artist of The Week

Sculptor, Dominic Antignano

By R.B. Stuart

Dominic Antignano has been a blacksmith for several years. "As far as iron goes, I cut my teeth with blacksmithing," Antignano said. "And from there I expanded into what I'm currently doing, creating metal sculptures and functional art."

For three years Antignano has been working as an artist. His blacksmithing shouldn't be confused with someone making horseshoes, who is called a farrier. Antignano's first commission was a hand railing for Pelar Gallery in Greenport, which sent him on a path to more serious sculpting. "I found out I really enjoyed it. It was a bridge that taught me it could be functional and art at the same time."

With his use of functional art in local establishments, Antignano made his way into the art world as a sculptor and functional artist, which wasn't what he expected after having grown up in Brooklyn where he longed to live in the country and be a farmer. Although he always enjoyed welding and shaping metal. "The process is what intrigued me," he explained. "It wasn't what I was making, it was the way things were made, how they worked."

Antignano was born in Brooklyn 55 years ago into a family of two sisters and one brother. His father was a musician who frequently sketched. "All of my siblings are artistic as well as my three sons," Antignano said of his family. "But I never considered myself an artist, instead just someone who wanted to work with iron and was eager to learn the artistic process. I've been creative with floral cultural and horticultural, but I was never moved enough until I saw a blacksmith working," he remembered.

Antignano graduated from Cornell and wanted to be a cooperative extension agent. In the 1970s he designed programs for energy conservation and taught the people of Suffolk County how to conserve. His sculptures are made out of all recycled materials such as industrial cast off scrap steel, copper, building parts and bronze from the junkyard.

"I really have no preconceived notion of what the piece represents, I leave that up to the viewer," he said. "For instance, none of my work has a title, just numbers. Since they don't represent anything specific, I leave it open for interpretation. To me it's more about technique than a predetermined notion. And it's out of that technique when people who look at art are able to see something different," Antignano informed of his work.

Then he added with a chuckle, "People like it and it's been selling, so it's really a bonus. I only wish I didn't have to sleep, then it'd be able to do it more."

His inspiration is attributed to the blacksmiths he's worked with. And the work that has influenced him the most is Italian sculptor Alberto Giacometti. "I like the way he utilizes the bronze casting process, but mostly, all the artists I've met no matter what the medium, have influenced my work," he admits.

Antignano says his next step is to make larger sculptures, as he considers this has been practice for making them bigger. He sees his work changing as he continues to grow and change. "It's an evolution.....a process," he reflects. And there isn't one thing in his life he'd change.

In ten years he thinks he'll still be living in Mattituck doing the same thing, "Still loving my family, loving food, loving gardening. I have a passion for music and iron," he concluded. "If you find something that works well for you then you should stick with it."

If you were unable to see Antignano's work at Cecily's Love Lane Gallery in Mattituck, then you can view it at the Members Show titled "Recent Works" at the East End Arts Council in Riverhead where it will be on display until February 11. And if you're traveling to England, it will be on display at the Gallerie Pelar in Cornwall or on their website at www.wingett.com

Good Wines and an Even Better Cause at Martha Clara Vineyards

As mentioned in this column a couple weeks ago, the 2006 Long Island Wine Country Winter Festival is taking place throughout the month of February. And it should come as no surprise that Martha Clara Vineyards, they of the jam-packed event schedule, is taking part in a big way. Cooking classes, chocolate-making demonstrations and oyster shucking dot the calendar. But one event stands out.

On Friday, February 17, Martha Clara Vineyards is hosting a dinner and auction to benefit Healing the Children - Northeast for a medical mission to Guayaquil, Ecuador, that will provide healthcare and surgery to the poor children of the region. Dinner will include authentic Ecuadorian fare, including locro, a potato soup made with cheese and avocado, chicken in peanut sauce, churrasco barbecued steak, shrimp ceviche, fried yucca, fried plantains and coconut cookies. For just $30 you get dinner, beer, wine and entrance to the auction, which includes items such as dinner for two at Tavern on the Green, tickets to a play in New York City, dinner for 10 at Martha Clara Vineyards, and many more prizes.

Reserve your seats by February 11 by calling 298-0075 ext. 22 or make donations to Healing the Children - Northeast by mailing them to P.O. Box 129, New Milford, CT 06776.

Arrive early and taste some of Martha Clara's bottlings in their always-busy tasting room. Of their new and current releases, a few stand out and are certainly worth trying.

For $20, the Martha Clara Brut Methode Champenoise Sparkling Wine, is one of the best values in local bubbly. Its nose is crisp apples and buttermilk biscuits. The palate is thirst-quenchingly refreshing, with lean, fresh apple flavors and a slightly tart finish.

Martha Clara Vineyards' 2002 Syrah ($20) is a pleasant example of cool-weather Syrah and nothing like the fruit bomb, jammy Shiraz you find down under. The nose is a bit shy at first but still complex, with blackberries, pie spices and toasty-earthy back notes. Medium-bodied on the palate, this is a prime wine for food because of its well-balanced profile, which brings some fruitiness together with soft, round tannins and spices that are sure to complement a wide array of cuisines. Syrah is relatively rare on Long Island, so this wine is interesting just for that fact. Drink in the next few years.

For a bigger, fruitier, more aromatic red, Martha Clara Vineyards 2001 Estate Reserve Cabernet Sauvignon ($30) fits the bill. Soon after pouring a glass, potent aromas of black raspberries and blueberry pie invite the first sip, but wait a bit if you can - half an hour or so - and you'll be glad you did. At first the flavors are full, though simple, but eventually develop into a delicious blend of black raspberry, black cherry and cinnamon. Lightly gripping tannins add a little structure and the finish is fairly lengthy. Drink now or cellar for another five years or so.

Lastly, Martha Clara Vineyards 2004 Himmel ($31) is a highly-recommended ice wine. Made with frozen Riesling and Gewurztraminer grapes, it's sweet, but surprisingly light in the mouth with layered floral and fruit flavors and a hint of cotton candy and burnt sugar. This one has some aging potential as well, but it is succulent and luscious already.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

LIFE AND ART AS ONE

Part 1

Some will say that all art is an expression of the creators' sensibilities, life experiences, beliefs, values and so on. Yet we also know that many works labeled art do not signify a world view or come from encounters with life. No matter. They may be art as well.

We prefer to define art (if such a thing is possible) by the former consideration: that it does, indeed, represent an individual's interests, experiences, feelings, and commitments. While there's nothing profound or new about this observation, we must not forget the kind of so-called art which is derivative and/or created solely for the commercial marketplace.

East Hampton's Lewis Zacks is one example of an artist who doesn't follow trends or produce products which will "sell." Instead, he follows his own passions and fascinations, hoping that other people will relate to his work. But if they don't, that's all right as well. We are talking particularly about Mr. Zacks' paintings of Manhattan street signs, now showing at the Nabi Gallery in New York. But most are no ordinary street signs. They are, in fact, signs which hang above neighborhood stores, businesses with a long history and rich cultural tradition. In a word, stores (and their signs) that have become New York icons.

Mr. Zacks' intense love for Manhattan certainly plays a part in his engagement with such signs. But it's not merely their sense of nostalgia that attracts him. They are also reminders of the ethnic ties that bind the Lower Side together. And we can't forget Mr. Zacks' continuing penchant for diverse neighborhoods. (He says he and his wife, the poet Fran Castan, would rent an apartment in a different neighborhood for three months each year, living anywhere from East 72nd Street to 14th Street to West 80th Street.)

It is also Mr. Zacks' professional pursuits which have given his paintings their special imagery. Not only did he study printmaking at Boston's Museum of Fine Art, but he also moved to New York, with friends, before he could graduate, to become an illustrator. He ended up working for an advertising agency where he learned storyboarding. But it was becoming a director of location shooting for commercials that had the most influence on his current paintings: an acute sense of place and the storytelling aspects.

Consider his current work on exhibit. There's the signature Second Avenue Deli sign, documenting a salient landmark. (Ironically, Deli may be closing in the near future.) Then there's his Schapiro's House of Kosher Wines which provides an effective complement to the Deli's image. Both are painted from a worm's-eye-view to reinforce their powerful presence.

Mr. Zacks recreates a moment and place in time and our imaginations draw us back to yesteryear.

We hear the sounds of children playing stickball in the street, mothers calling down to their offspring from tenement apartments. It's almost a scene from a movie unfolding before our very eyes (or at least in our minds).

There are other icons in Mr. Zacks' current exhibit that are not related to stores, including a poster reproduction featuring Fred Astaire. The view also gives immortality and potency to the figure. But we wonder what is on either side of the image, what is happening beyond the canvas, in the off-screen space. Again, we create a story in our mind.

While concrete and specific, Mr. Zacks' images expand our imagination.

Mr. Zacks' works will be on view in the exhibit, "CITY LIGHTS" at the Nabi Gallery (137 W. 25th Street) until March 11. Tel. 212-929-6063

HONORING THE ARTIST: IVA GUEORGUIEVA

Bulgarian-born cover artist Iva Gueorguieva is a lucky woman. After three years living in New Orleans, she decided to move to Los Angeles just a few days before Katrina struck. It wasn't a premonition, but rather health reasons that motivated Iva's decision, and she is, of course, angry about the tragedy she left behind.

Even so, Iva has no regrets about making her home in New Orleans. Again, she considers herself fortunate that she could fulfill a lifelong dream. "When I was growing up in Bulgaria, I would see photographs of New Orleans; it was my fantasy to go there one day," she explained.

After sojourns in Baltimore (where she received a B.A. in Philosophy from Goucher College) and Philadelphia (where she got an M.F.A. in Painting from Temple University) Iva finally moved to New Orleans.

While she liked the "Big Easy," she confronted certain difficulties. "I was teaching art at Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge," Iva notes, "and there was such a contrast between nature and the chemical plants I would encounter when commuting to the State University. It changed my perspective. It became an ecological nightmare."

Iva finds Los Angeles a wonderful setting where she can enjoy nature, saying that she can be at the beach in twenty minutes. "In New Orleans, I couldn't escape. In Los Angeles, there is escape. To the mountains, for example. Yet there's a contradiction because the fog surrounds me, too. That's not an escape."

Iva also feels she's lucky that she's able to teach drawing at U.C.L.A. and because she found a loft north of Chinatown where she can live and paint. "I could never afford a place like that in New York," she comments.

Speaking of painting, Iva's subject matter is surprisingly provocative and political in nature. We say "surprisingly" because one would expect Iva to be attracted to landscapes and other natural settings. Instead, her works reflect the turbulent nature of life, including concerns related to Iraq.

An example is this week's cover, a piece called "Liars" that was featured in a recent show at Water Mill's Sara Nightingale Gallery.

According to Iva, "Liars" is part of a series dealing with meditation about political issues. "I use an abstract style, a cartoon-like method that's a shorthand conveying the fears and frustrations present in today's society," Iva explains.

Finally, Iva admits she's been fortunate to have parents who encouraged her in her artistic pursuits. "My mother is a doctor, my father an engineer," she says with pride, "and they took me to museums when I was young. They even gave me my first watercolor set when I was one year old."

We have a feeling that luck is not what keeps Iva going, however. Rather, it's her lust for life. Or as she explains it, "It's possible to have a better world. I believe my art has to be connected to a lived experience."

Entertainment In Town

review: bridge & tunnel...by gordin & christiano

Written and performed by Sarah Jones, Bridge & Tunnel, an affectionately winning tribute to our multi-cultural immigrants in search of the American dream, has arrived on Broadway just in time for Valentine's Day. In her one woman show, which won Ms. Jones rave reviews and an Obie Award during a downtown run at the Culture Project two years ago, the actress portrays more than a dozen astutely observed ethnic characters of both sexes, who are performing at an annual poetry jam for immigrants. This year's poetry jam venue is a café in South Queens which is better than last year's Starbucks, where they had to compete with the espresso machine.

Making her Broadway debut, we first see Ms. Jones coming up the aisle as a bedraggled woman, who is part of the homeless usher program, making the turn your cell phone off announcement. She cautions us not to feel sorry for her because she is homeless, because she has seen Beauty and the Beast over 2000 times. Next Ms. Jones is our good-natured host for the evening, a Pakistani accountant named Mohammed Ali. Before taking the stage, Mr. Ali is on the phone with his wife assuring her there is nothing to worry about. There seems to be some sort of problem with the IRS.

Ms. Jones is a gifted mimic, a chameleon of sorts, taking on a wide range of accents and body postures as she inhabits a variety of ethnic Americans during her 90-minute odyssey. Some of the personas we see her whip up are Lorraine Levine, a mature Jewish European American woman; Bal, a young male Vietnamese American rapper; Gladys Bailey, a wise Jamaican American social worker; Boris, a Russian American from Brooklyn; Juan Jones, a wheelchair-bound Mexican American; an Australian American artist; and a Chinese American housewife with a lesbian daughter. They make for a dazzling display and her adaptability is impressive. She shapes her unique characters by embodying each with a distinctly different physical and vocal quality. In the process she makes easy costume adjustments by donning a different jacket over her simple black outfit and often covers her head with a hat or a scarf.

Her writing is clever, smart, and witty. You feel she has a genuine fondness for these people. She has created funny, yet sweetly sentimental portraits that are non-threatening, even heart-warming. The 32-year-old writer/actress certainly knows her territory. Her father is a black American from Baltimore, where Ms. Jones was born, and her mother, who is from New York and looks white, is of mixed heritage: Irish/German on her mother's side and Caribbean/Dominican on her father's side.

Through her character Lorraine Levine, Ms. Jones reminds us, "Here in America we have freedom to say what we want, be what we want, to decide what happens in our country, and we even get to decide what happens in other people's countries."

Tony Taccone, the Artistic Director of the Berkeley Repertory Theatre, who developed the project with Ms. Jones, has directed the evening (his Broadway debut) as well, on a much too comfortable level. His direction mirrors the writing and lacks a sense of urgency that would bring more humor and poignancy to the proceedings. For instance, before the poetry jam begins and during its intermission, Mohammed Ali is on the phone with his wife about an IRS problem. We never sense his urgency to get her off the phone or feel his conflict. Similarly, each of the evening's participants demonstrates little need for approval, or shows any sense of anxiety. They are just too comfortable and without this duality the evening is merely sweet, not really hilarious. Look at Gilda Radner and you will know the difference.

Granted we attended January 25, the night before opening, which could have been an off performance. The lady certainly has the goods and with her tribute to our immigrants she is not only honoring them, but the dream that brings them here.

Bridge & Tunnel opened on Broadway January 26 at the Helen Hayes Theatre, 240 West 44th Street. Performance schedule is Tues. 7 p.m., Wed., Thurs., Fri. 8 p.m., Sat. 2 & 8 p.m., Sun. 3 & 7 p.m. For tickets call 212-239-6200 or visit www.telecharge.com.

Dave Evans' MINI - MOVIE REVIEWS

Something New

Like fairly typical romantic comedy conventions, the film follows Kenya (Sanaa Lathan), a successful accountant in search of a successful relationship. Kenya is assisted by the usual gaggle of girlfriends and ultimately must make the choice between sturdy Brian (Simon Baker) and ravishing new guy Mark (Blair Underwood). Predictable fare, but utterly delightful.

When A Stranger Calls

Basing a film on an urban myth seems strange given the difference between five minutes around a campfire and ninety minutes of celluloid. Here, director Simon West plays out the problems, starting off spookily enough with an enactment of the prank-caller-calling-from-within-the-house nightmare and then trailing off into a dull police procedural.

Nanny McPhee

Colin Firth stars as a widower with seven badly behaved children who have scared off the help. Instead of Mary Poppins, the family ends up in the care of the magical Nanny McPhee (Emma Thompson, under heavy prosthetics). Throw in the adorable Thomas Sangster (of Love Actually fame) and this is delightful, old-fashioned family fun.

Big Momma's House 2

Director John Whitesell (also on his 'coming soon' roster, Cats and Dogs 2: Tinkle's Revenge) must be paying off some kind of debt as he heads up this uninspired sequel to the not terribly successful 2000 original. Martin Lawrence picks up where he left off as the FBI agent forced to go undercover as an obese middle-aged woman. It will make you yearn for the days before fat-suits.

Annapolis

Jake Huard (James Franco), a kid from the wrong side of the tracks who yearns to be accepted to the Naval Academy, finds all his dreams come true. Once there, however, he finds he must prove himself to those around him by taking part in the fierce boxing competition that is the Brigade Championships. A little bit Top Gun, a little bit Rocky, a lot of tedious nonsense about the 'honor' of violence.

Hoodwinked

Following the lead of Shrek, yet on a fraction of the budget, this charming animation, written and directed by Cory and Todd Edwards, puts a twist on the classic fairy tale of Little Red Riding Hood. With excellent vocal work from the unfairly sidelined Glenn Close and the newly (thanks to Brokeback Mountain) credible Anne Hathaway this is delightful, unglossy family fun.

Transamerica

Jumping the seemingly sinking ship of

"Desperate Housewives," Felicity Huffman (Lynette in the show) stars in this offbeat comedy-drama as a born-again Christian pre-operative male-to-female transsexual who suddenly discovers the teenage son she has accidentally fathered. What could be a clumsy slapstick tale of gender disparity turns into something both touching and funny.

Match Point

Woody Allen leaves behind his beloved New York and the snide, misanthropic tone of last year's dismal Melinda and Melinda for this taut psychological thriller set in London. Scarlett Johansson stars as the femme fatale who lures a weak at the knees Jonathan Rhys-Meyers into personal disaster. The cast and the city are stunningly framed in Allen's strongest outing in years.

Last Holiday

A radical revision of the 1950 Alec Guinness vehicle, this finds Georgia (Queen Latifah) reassessing her life after discovering she has a terminal illness. Setting off to Europe, Georgia sets about living life in the fast lane. Cheesy and kind of lame, this is nonetheless some welcome fluff among the current slew of heavy-hearted would-be Oscar contenders.

Underworld: Evolution

Seemingly working on the perhaps unwise maxim of "if it's broke, do it again," director Len Wiseman squeezes out another dismal sequel to the 2003 original. Vampires and werewolves feature heavily, which is all well and good, but the film again mistakenly places its faith in leading lady Kate Beckinsale, perhaps the worst actress of her generation. The great Bill Nighy smirks his way through this sorry sham of a film.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood in The Hamptons

It will take a subpoena or a bottle of Pepto-Bismol to get me to admit how dismal my expectations are for the future of the American motion picture as we have grown to grin and bear 'em. Dyspepsia and down right nausea follow too many movies. There, I've said it! Fortunately, a film will arrive and, like Alka Seltzer, offer speedy relief. A marvelous instant picker-upper is Terrance Malick's film The New World, a contemplative meditation on the love story of Pocahontas and Captain John Smith in the 17th century drama of the Jamestown, Virginia founding colony. It has come to my rescue not a minute too soon. I do regret it's taken so long. Mr. Malick's last film appeared 8 years ago. He has made only three other films in the past 33 years. The New World was worth waiting for. It is 135 minutes of a grand and wondrous, truly cinematic, and passionate historic visualization of the virginal, rich America. If a metaphor may be implied, it treats the young Indian princess Pocahontas with the same romantic reverence.

The artfulness of Malick's dream-like, other world vision has the reflective qualities of the country's rivers and lakes and the freshness of the huge landscapes, that are made more invigorating by the sweep of the sights and accompanying sounds that take your gasping breath away. This writer/director utilizes much more direction than writing. Awash with visual language, The New World has few words, though much is expressed in internal voice-over monologues of the key players. Mostly, the audience should sit way back and, as if from an eagle's nest, watch the new world reveal itself.

This fertile, Eden-like land was uncharted but Europeans knew of its natives. The English arrived in the early 1600s, over-dressed, over-protected and over-civilized. Colin Farrell, as John Smith, is a seething provocateur who fell in love with the "blessings of the earth" but could not be shackled to its beauty. The soldier of fortune arrived here in chains to be hanged for insubordination, and was then released to make contact with the 'Naturals.' He managed to meet with their chief, Powhatan, after he was caught and caged. Smith's accounts about whether he was tortured or given an initiation in a ritual are hazy. Malick's interpretation is that Smith's near-death experience is a smoke-clouded hallucination and that his life is spared by the chief's daughter, Pocahontas, a pubescent 12-year-old. Old Europe's aggrandizing the incident fed mythology and the force of civilization v.s the mysterious argument, bringing about oppressive domination.

The director's skillful originality rises spectacularly to the love depiction. In a surreal mix of vivid imagery, he has the lovers in a free, circling dance. We hear their inner thoughts in the voice-overs the director uses so effectively. Pocahontas' yearnings are little-girlish. Smith's seem to be pointed toward history. The viewer knows it won't be long before his haughtiness and restlessness will separate them, allowing the princess to grow royally strong. When Smith is sent off on another expedition, she meets and marries John Rolfe, gently portrayed by Christian Bale. Pocahontas weds him a long time after Smith has departed, but Malick will not give us the usual "let's get the lovers back together" routine. As expected, it remains unresolved. Hey! She was a child and there was the possibility of more warring between the Colonists and Naturals. This young princess had an impact. Seen later, presented in the English court with other rarities like a bald eagle, she is dressed in the Jacobean overdress of civilization; it's no wonder she died at the age of 22 or 23. She was a rare bird. Rarity is not with us too frequently these days. One of them is the actress given the role of Pocahontas. She's the 14-year-old Q'orianka Kilcher, as fresh and enrapturing as the film itself.

Oh, c'mon – let The New World carry you over the James River to a land you may not remember you're living in. It's a lot more effective than a TV commercial remedy.

When In Manhattan... BY OLIVER PETERSON

Fashion School Starts with History

New York and fashion are, and will always be, joined. It's impossible to consider one without thinking of the other. "Project Runway," "America's Next Top Model" and any of the various fashion-oriented television programs take place in our city. It's the obvious and correct choice. If we're talking fashion in America, we're in Manhattan. Gotham is also the home of some of the most prestigious fashion and design schools in the world. The New School plays host to the crazy kids on "Project Runway," but probably the most well known college is Fashion Institute of Technology (FIT) which, after all, has "fashion" right in its name. FIT is a SUNY (State) school. So while it's hip to fashion, rather than simply "design," like Parsons, it's also affordable. My wife went to FIT and she asserts that "It prepares you for the industry by stressing the interviewing process and getting into the job market. The professors have life experience in the business, past and present, or are published in their field." Her years there were a positive experience. But FIT isn't just a school. It is an invaluable resource for the fashion world in one of the biggest and most important cities for the industry. The Museum at FIT was founded in 1967 to support the educational programs of the school. It is now one of only a select few museums dedicated to the art of fashion, and is home to one of the world's most important collections of conserved, documented and exhibited fashion and textiles. Through donations and purchases, the collection continues to grow.

Just last year, the museum received a $1 million bequest from the estate of Alfred Z. Solomon, a wholesale distributor of high-fashion women's hats. As per Solomon's request, the gift will serve to create the Accessories Collection, a new department at the museum. With money coming in and fashion going further into the mainstream than ever before, this year marks the landmark opening of a new permanent exhibition – the Fashion and Textile History Gallery.

The Museum at FIT says in their mission statement that they "Celebrate fashion and textiles as profoundly human expressions of creativity, knowledge, and identity." The new exhibition is America's first and only permanent gallery of fashion and textile history. The museum's collections host over 50,000 garments and accessories dating from the 18th century up to today's designer fashions, 30,000 textiles from the 6th to 21st centuries, 300,000 textile swatches and 1,300 sample books. Selections from this breadth of material will rotate and continually change in the chronologically displayed exhibition. The organized timeline helps students and visitors understand the important social, cultural, and technological evolutions that fashion manifests. About 100 new objects will be chosen from FIT's vast catalogue every six months for display. On top of that, fashion illustrations will be selected from the Special Collections of the Gladys Marcus Library at FIT. This always-changing permanent addition to the museum is a perfect way to complement the thematic exhibitions featured in the other main gallery and supplement the public programs, lectures, and tours.

Thousands of students, scholars, and designers have used the resources available in the FIT collection for research, inspiration, and study over the years. Dr. Valerie Steele, the museum's director, believes the new gallery will allow these resources to be shared with the public. ELLE Magazine and Redken are sponsoring the Fashion and Textile History Gallery.

There have been a few exhibitions of fashion and designers at some of New York's big museums as of late, but the Museum at FIT is unlike anything in the city. The new gallery is a must-see, but don't forget about their other great offerings. "Textiles from the Garden of Eden" opens on February 17th, as does the Annual Symposium, "Museum Quality: Collecting and Exhibiting Fashion and Textiles." The best part – admission is free.

The Museum at FIT and The Fashion and Textile History Gallery is located at 7th Avenue at 27th Street in Manhattan. They are open Tuesday-Friday Noon-8pm, Saturday 10a.m.-5p.m. Closed Sundays, Mondays, and legal holidays. Admission to the exhibition is free. Call (212) 217-5970 or go to FITNYC.edu for more information.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

Two Trailheads

Last Saturday I led a hike in the Mulvihill Preserve. This is one of the prettiest trails on the East End. We met along the shoulder of Brick Kiln Road, 0.3-miles north of the intersection with Scuttle Hole Road. To find the entrance to the trail, look for a black on yellow road-sign, or look across the road for the Bridge Hill Lane intersection. There is no formal parking area, there is no sign at the trailhead, and there is no warning for motorists to slow down for hikers.

There is another access point for the Mulvihill Loop Trail further north on Brick Kiln Road, via the Paumanok Path. Park by the triangle formed at the intersection of Brick Kiln and Stony Hill Road. Walk south on Brick Kiln Road; look for white rectangular blazes on the left side of the road; follow the Paumanok Path to the yellow owl loop. Again, parking is very awkward here and it is hard to see the trail from the road. If you are coming from the east, it is helpful to know that you can take Lumber Lane to Scuttle Hole Road to get to Brick Kiln Road.

The Mulvihill Trail is well blazed and the trail tread is spongy. The more southerly entrance takes you along a laurel-filled corridor, across a power line right-of-way, up a rise that looks out over a pond, and over a bridge that crosses a brook, to the Loop Trail. Watch your step; there are stumps and roots of laurel. The loop trail is marked with plastic blazes: yellow owls on a white background. At one time, the loop was two trails, a segment of a yellow trail and a black trail. Hikers found this confusing, so it was changed to the yellow loop trail.

Where the access trail meets the loop trail, there needs to be a sign showing that the access trail leads back to the "Brick Kiln Road trailhead." Two "Loop" signs are needed, one pointing straight ahead and one pointing to the left. A "Privately Owned Land" sign is needed pointing to the right.

I usually start the loop by turning left and walking along the edge of the pond. The trail takes you over several steep knobs, with kettlehole ponds nestled in-between. The northern section of the loop shares the trail with the Paumanok Path. It is here that the trail ascends a high knoll into a grove of mature white pines.

Driving home, I decided to take a look at a Pine Barrens Commission project in the Dwarf Pine Plains. At Sunrise Highway, exit 63, I headed south and found the Water Authority parking lot a short distance south on the east side of CR31. The beginning of the Dwarf Pitch Pine Interpretive Trail is on the southern edge of the parking lot. This short loop trail is in the planning stage, so it is marked with surveyor's ribbon and wooden stakes. I had fun guessing where the interpretive signs will be and what they will say. There are plans for a larger loop trail as well as an observation platform for the area.

Across CR 31, on the west side, there is a parking area surrounded by a wooden fence. At the northern corner of the parking area are several kiosks describing the fire of 1995 and the Pine Barrens fire-dependent ecology. There is a trail that can be accessed on this side of CR 31 but it does not open to the parking lot. It is accessible north of the adjacent hot dog stand. This is not a well-designed hiking trail and the trail tread is chopped up by ATVs.

A field enforcement sweep took place here last week; a large number of ATVs were impounded and many tickets written for illegal ATV operation. For now, the trail is recovering. The Pine Barrens Law Enforcement Council (LEC), an "arm" of the Central Pine Barrens Joint Planning and Policy Commission (CPBC), conducted the enforcement sweep. For more information visit pb.state.ny.us.

The LEC was established by the CPBC in 1994 to develop and implement a comprehensive law enforcement plan to patrol and protect the 100,000 acres of Pine Barrens in Central Suffolk County. This Council includes 25 law enforcement and emergency response agencies. Last year the LEC seized and impounded almost 500 ATVs and wrote 600 tickets for illegal ATV operation. Redemption fees paid to the county and towns by ATV owners for the return of impounded ATVs was in excess of $90,000.

The cooperative nature of the LEC has made it a very effective mechanism for controlling illegal ATV use, such as dumping and other unpermitted uses. Every year the LEC is becoming more effective. It is the public's responsibility to help them. If you see someone abusing the public lands, call 911. In a non-emergency situation, report patterns of illegal activity by calling 1-877-BARRENS.

With a little help from Katlean
de Monchy and David Post

Last week, Mom and I went to the Fourth Birthday party for Sophia and Sabrina Gordon, given at Doubles by their mom, Lucia Hwong Gordon. Lots of kids and parents that I see in the Hamptons were there. We danced and so did some of the moms. We played games and, of course, we had delicious treats.

Do you have an event coming up that you would like to get in our column? The first thing to do is to send an email with all the particulars to my dad at david@nextpert.com

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

This was the week that was.....The weather has been almost spring-like, which made my shopping a breeze. I found some good sales and would like to share them with you as usual. Let's shop!

In Westhampton Beach at Pine Cone on Glover Lane, there is a "Moving Sale" in progress with up to 70% off on jewelry, limoges, Maitland Smith and much more.

While you're in Hampton Bays, stop in at the Artisan Gallery at 15 Ponquogue Avenue where they have a wide range of gift items similar to what is found in an art museum gift store, as well as the work of local artists and craft workers. There are some good ideas for your Valentine's Day gift. Renaissance, on Main Street in Southampton, is a cute, friendly store with lots to offer. There is a 50% off sale in progress on just about everything in the store. You will love the clothing, hats, bags, jewelry, boots, shoes, and accessories here. There are even vintage-looking hanging chandeliers that would make a great Valentine's Day gift for that sexy gal or guy in your life. Stop in and enjoy.

At Casual Home, on County Road 39 in Southampton, look for a "Tax Free and Selected Samples Sale" on great home furnishings, lamps, and accessories. This shop is a great source for comfy country-living furnishings. It one of my favorites because everything here is affordable.

Patio.com on Montauk Highway in Southampton is all ready for Super Bowl Sunday fun. The store is offering a pre-game survival deal with free delivery by game time on the stain-resistant, felt Brunswick Pool Table and kit. If you purchase it before February 4, you will get the Brunswick Player Chair (valued at $750) free.

Pier One on Montauk Highway in Southampton is having a "Bedroom Sale" with 40% off. The store is packed to the rafters with some unusual new additions in furnishings, housewares and accessories. For Valentine's Day, you will find everything from candles and candleholders, to martini glasses. You name it, it's probably here.

In Bridgehampton at the Commons, Victoria's Secret is having their "Annual Winter Sale" on sexy undies in all shapes, forms and sizes and sleepwear is a whopping 50% off. The sale will run until everything is gone but that won't be for long because this merchandise is flying out the door for Valentine's Day gifts.

Nearby at Bombay, you will find lots of new merchandise that has just come in and 75% off selected merchandise. Some of the holiday ornaments are selling for one dollar. Of course, I bought a bunch for stocking-stuffers for next year. There are also some great Valentine's Day gift ideas here, including frames, pen sets, perfume bottles, vases, as well as home furnishings and accessories.

On Snake Hollow Road in Bridgehampton and North Sea Road in Southampton, look for English Country Antiques' famous "Winter Sale" on chandeliers, lamps, luxury linens, sectionals, sleepers, beds, chairs, sofa tables, dining chairs, club chairs, Mitchel Gold upholstery and much more.

Also in the Commons at Pay Less, there is a sale on selected merchandise with up to 50% off on some of the boots, shoes, pocket books, slippers and accessories. Now is the time to stock up and enjoy the savings.

Three locations, one big sale! It is the "Semi-Annual" sale at Nancy & Co., called "Nancy is out of town sale"! They are located on Jobs Lane in Southampton, Newtown Lane in East Hampton and Madison Avenue in New York City. You will find some of your favorite clothing and accessories drastically reduced from 50% to 90% off. Now consider the 90% off, you are really only paying 10% of the original cost! That's my kind of sale. Shhh.....don't tell anyone, it's a secret!

Medusa at 58 Park Place in East Hampton is having a huge February "Winter Collection" sale with from 50% to 75% off their winter merchandise. Stop in, shop and enjoy!

Nellie's Of Amagansett on Main Street has some great bargains to get you ready for the spring season. Look for good deals on high worktables for the kitchen or computer room, benches, Vermont hand-turned salad bowls, exquisite glass front bookcases, early blanket chests, tables and cupboards, hard to find mustard small step-back cupboards, tiger maple farm table base, brass double bed, and iron twin beds, to name a few.

Until next week. Ciao and happy Valentine's Day shopping.....

If you have any questions or comments, or your shop is having a sale, I would love to know about it. E-mail me at shoptil@danspapers.com or by fax at 631-537-6755.

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

There's always a bit of excitement in the air preceding Super Bowl Sunday. The devotion of football fans around the country is only part of it. Plans are no doubt underway for game-day get-togethers, and super snacks and other food treats are high on the list.

A hearty snack such as a heaping plate of tortilla chips with a fresh avocado tomato salsa puts an immediate spin on your party. A platter of cheesy floured tortillas with a zesty mix of mushrooms, jalapeno and grated Jack cheese for hungry fans along with a bowl of fresh vegetable nibbles can become satisfying finger food when the quesadillas are halved or quartered. Or serve up a delicious gratin of chicken enchiladas if you're in the mood to treat your guests to something more substantial.

Whatever you choose to serve, happy Super Bowl Sunday and hope your team wins!

AVOCADO, TOMATILLO, CILANTRO SALSA

There's a lively freshness to this salsa. If heat is your thing by all means add chopped jalapeno pepper to your taste.

Yield: 2 cups salsa

- 2 ripe on-the-vine tomatoes
- 2 tomatillos, papery outer skin removed
- 3-4 scallions, white and light green parts thinly sliced
- 1 ripe avocado
- 3-4 tablespoons chopped cilantro leaves
- 4-5 tablespoons fresh lime juice
- Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper

1. Rinse and dry the tomatoes and tomatillos. Slice thinly then stack the slices and cut into very small dice. Transfer to a mixing bowl and add sliced scallions. Slice the avocado in half, discard pit and scoop out the meat. Cut into small dice and add to the tomato mixture with the cilantro. Season mixture with lime juice, salt and pepper to taste. Toss gently to mix. Refrigerate in a suitable container until ready to serve.

QUESADILLAS WITH MUSHROOMS AND CHEESE

A heaping platter of these cheesy treats is a sure way to score points.

Serves 6

2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

3-4 scallions, trimmed and thinly sliced

2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1 small jalapeno, seeds removed and diced

10 ounces cultivated button mushrooms, wiped clean and thinly sliced

2 tablespoons chopped cilantro or flat-leaf parsley

Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

2 tablespoons unsalted butter
6 (8-inch) flour tortillas

1 (8-ounce) package grated Jack cheese

1. Heat oil in a 10-inch non-stick skillet and add the scallions and garlic. Sauté for 1-2 minutes over medium-low heat, stirring frequently. Add the jalapeno and mushrooms and cook, stirring occasionally for 3-4 minutes longer until mushrooms are tender. Season the mixture with salt and pepper to your taste. Add the cilantro or parsley and stir to mix. Remove to a side dish and divide into 6 even portions.

2. In the same skillet melt 1 teaspoon butter and put in one flour tortilla. Spoon on one-sixth mushroom mixture over half the tortilla. Scatter 2 tablespoons grated cheese over the mushrooms and fold over the tortilla. Cook for another minute or so and transfer to a baking sheet. Continue until all are done. Drizzle over any melted butter from the pan. The quesadillas can be halved or quartered for handy finger food. Can be made up to an hour ahead to this point.

3. When ready to serve slip the baking sheet holding the filled tortillas in a 350-oven and heat through for 10-12 minutes. Serve warm.

CHICKEN ENCHILADAS

A completely do-ahead dish from Mexico way.

Serves 6

For the salsa verde

6-8 tomatillos, paper-like covering removed
1-2 jalapenos

For the chicken

2 whole chicken breasts on the bone
1 small onion
2-3 parsley sprigs
1 tablespoon coarse (kosher) salt

For the white sauce

1 cup sour cream
5-6 tablespoons heavy cream

To Finish

12 fajita-size flour tortillas
1 1/2 cups grated cheddar cheese

1. Rinse tomatillos and jalapenos in a saucepan with water to cover by one inch. Bring to the boil and simmer with cover ajar for 10 minutes until ingredients are tender. Drain, transfer to a blender or food processor and purée. Set aside.

2. Meanwhile cook the chicken in cold water to cover over medium heat with onion, parsley and salt until chicken is tender, about 15-18 minutes. Let chicken cool in the broth off heat about 5 minutes. Remove chicken from broth and cut the meat away from the skin and bones, then shred the meat. (For a flavorful broth add the discards to the liquid along with some aromatic seasonings and simmer about an hour.)

3. In a small bowl add the sour cream, heavy cream and stir to mix. In a hot iron skillet heat the tortillas, one at a time, for a few seconds on each side.

4. To assemble place a handful of shredded chicken on each tortilla and roll up jelly-roll style. Place them side-by-side in a shallow baking dish. Generously spoon sour cream sauce mixture over the enchiladas to cover completely. Drizzle the salsa verde over the white sauce. Scatter a thick layer of grated cheese over all. Can be prepared ahead to this point. When ready to serve bake in a preheated 250 degree oven for 15-20 minutes until cheese is hot and bubbly. Serve at once.

GREAT FOOD IN A COMFORTABLE SETTING

Dining in the Hamptons

Indian Cove Restaurant sits between the bay and the Shinnecock Canal. Along with its panoramic waterfront views, this local favorite is known for its casual charm, down-to-earth atmosphere and classic seafood menu. After meandering along the old docks lined with fishing boats and under a weeping willow that stands just outside the picturesque establishment, Peter and I headed inside.

To reach the dining room, which is situated atop a low bluff, one follows a narrow, ascending walkway. Inside are lofty ceilings and wraparound windows that look out over the canal, the orange lit dock and the water, which stretches out in all directions. We were seated in a cozy corner and served warm bread. Blues played softly in the background.

Seafood is the main event at Indian Cove and for those that feel passion for the sea, the menu will read like a love letter: Steamers, crab cakes, fried calamari, steamed mussels and shrimp cocktail, not to mention scallops, baked clams and succulent steamed lobsters are regular menu items, as well as little neck clams and raw oysters. Diners enjoy fresh local catches, prepped in a refreshingly straightforward manner – robust, subtle and delicious.

For those who prefer dry land, there is a plethora of turf options, including Cornish hens, pasta specials, or New York Strip Steak or Long Island duck in a blueberry, cabernet and ginger reduction. More elaborate dishes are served as well, such as roasted lamb with a walnut and mint crust, pecan crusted scallops, Asian-style Long Island duck rolls, escargot, and "Warm Oysters Lou Lou," a French dish of oysters baked with spinach and gorgonzola.

Our meal began with succulent strips of sushi grade tuna seared to perfection, served over hearty brown rice and stir-fried vegetables with particularly succulent portobello mushrooms. It was dressed in a light teriyaki sauce that flavored the dish without overwhelming the fish. Creamy wasabi sauce was dabbled along the circumference of the plate.

For the next round we decided on traditional appetizers: one order of fried calamari and a plate of Bill Pell's Oysters. After inquiring of our laid back and rather good-natured waiter, I learned that Bill Pell is the local fisherman who has hauled in these oysters for over ten years. You don't find that sort of thing in New York.

Even though I am not an oyster-lover usually, I slurped down one with a hit of cocktail sauce, gave a nod to Bill and then knocked back another. They were cold, fresh and perfectly plump.

The calamari had a firm, crispy outside and the meat was tender, unlike the rubbery duds I have tried before. The marinara sauce was full-bodied and well-seasoned, and most importantly, served warm. Sauce matters.

For my main course, I chose the seafood risotto, according to my server's suggestions and complemented it with pinot noir from California. Now, risotto demands precision and intuition, a perfect marriage of ingredients, perfect timing and touch, so I admit I was nervous. What arrived, however, appealed my culinary anxiety – a delicious, saffron-infused risotto studded with fresh chunks of heavenly lobster, tender scallops and plump shrimps in a creamy parmesan sauce. Oh, what an ambrosial concoction!

Peter ordered the venison, which was served over risotto as well. The meat was tender, seared and sliced into medallions. A subtle brown sauce was drizzled over, which, once again, avoided smothering the taste of the meat.

Just when we had plowed through almost the entirety of these generous portions, the next chapter began, a selection of homemade desserts: Creamy tiramisu, doughy and delectable bread pudding, cheesecake I have met in dreams, and soft, molten cake with warm fudge erupting at every bite. We ate, just kept going and going, sometimes without talking. I believe this is called food intoxication.

Summers at Indian Cove are boisterous, with a crowd throwing back beer and fresh oysters on the deck, and filled with open mic nights and plenty of events. Now, in late January, it feels more like a romantic getaway. But any season, the down-to-earth mood and "keep it fresh and simple" cuisine attract a crowd, along with the friendly service, which is attentive without being intrusive, and far from the ultra modern deadpan waitresses of Manhattan.

ROMANCING IN THE HAMPTONS

I Do . . . Again

One of the most romantic things you can do this Valentine's Day is to renew your wedding vows with your partner. And one of the most romantic places you can do this is at Gurney's Inn Resort & Spa, looking out over the beautiful Atlantic Ocean.

This Valentine's Day, couples from all over will come to Gurney's at 5 p.m. and join a renewal ceremony presided over by Judge Jim Ketcham of East Hampton. In past years, this event has been so popular that some couples have chosen it as their first time ceremony! But mostly, this is for people who enjoy the idea of committing to their loved one anew, perhaps rekindling that spark of love and excitement.

This ceremony actually began with an idea of Ingrid Lemme's, Gurney's Public Relations Director, who chose to get married 10 years ago with a big ceremony high atop the World Trade Center in Manhattan.

"My husband, Sunshine, and I wanted to do something different, and romantic, and we brought Nick and Lola Monte with us to the ceremony, and we just decided to continue a vows ceremony, bringing it to Gurney's eight years ago, so this year will be our ninth annual vows renewal ceremony," she said. "It's grown in popularity each year, and so far we've had hundreds of people renew their vows together."

Lemme said, "Each year, this event is really exciting, because the couples all take it seriously, and they look forward to it. It's one of our favorite events at Gurney's and it's the biggest happening in Montauk on Valentine's Day."

She said the first year of this ceremony at Gurney's Inn, they had a "24-hour marathon vows renewal," which was covered by Paul Sidney of WLNG Radio Station in Sag Harbor.

"We were on the radio for 24 hours promoting this new and big event," she said, "and since then it's caught on, with people coming here from all over to do it in style."

Paul Sidney said this week that he has "fond memories" of this event, and he enjoyed interviewing all these couples about their marriages. "Some had been married many years and others were newly married, but they all had great stories to share," he recalled. "We had so many wedding stories that we needed a marathon to cover it all. It was lots of fun and also sentimental."

This year, couples can stay later to enjoy Gurney's fabulous "Lovers' Dinner" for Valentine's Day, featuring a menu of five sumptuous courses, from appetizers to desserts, all designed to enhance the mood. The meal includes "lovers" desserts like chocolate-covered strawberries. The dinner comes with a complimentary bottle of champagne and a rose.

Couples coming from out of town can also choose to stay overnight and partake in the newly renovated spa on the premises, complete with a heated seawater pool and Roman baths, saunas, Swiss showers, steam room, and a large array of beauty and health treatments, from seaweed wraps to specialty massages. They can also walk on the beach, even in winter, and enjoy the magnificent views that make Gurney's a world-famous destination. In the evening, there is music, dancing and entertainment.

While renewing your vows, you can wear something formal or casual – including your original wedding gown, or buy another for the occasion, if you choose. Bring a camera to record your special moment.

Gurney's Inn Resort & Spa has recently been chosen by this paper as "Best Wedding Location" in the Hamptons, as well as "Best Waterfront Restaurant."

What better day to renew your vows than Valentine's Day? All that is needed is an appointment these special Valentine's Day events.

Call Ingrid Lemme at 631-668-1737. You can also make reservations for the special dinner by calling Gurney's at 631-668-2345. The staff at Gurney's Inn Resort wishes everyone a very happy Valentine's Day and looks forward to seeing even more couples renew their vows next year!

Food: For Your Health

Hippocrates once said, "Healing is a matter of time, but it is sometimes also a matter of opportunity." This ancient philosopher is known as the father of Western medicine, and it is through the Hippocratic Oath that all physicians in this country are sworn into the medical practice. Hippocrates believed not only in the benefits of medicine, but the role the body plays in its own healing. Hippocrates took the then-revolutionary stand that illness had a physical and rational explanation, as opposed to being brought on by the disfavor of the gods. He was the first to diagnose the symptoms of pneumonia and of epilepsy in children.

He believed the body should be healed holistically, because it was not just a conglomeration of parts, but a cohesive whole. Along with the administering of medicine, Hippocrates believed that the healing process necessitated fresh air, a healthy diet, cleanliness, and rest.

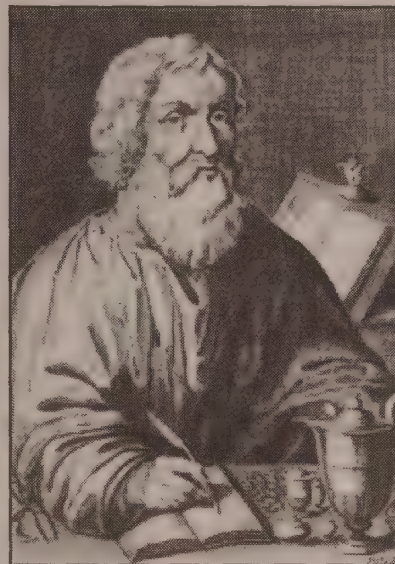

These four aspects of the healing process have been lost on many of us today. When we're sick, we go to the doctor, we pop the pills he/she prescribes, and we go back to work. That is not taking all the aspects of the healing process into account. To allow your body to fully heal from the ailments that sweep in and out during the winter months, it is best to try to implement these four pieces of advice, passed down through the ages.

Of these four points, three, fresh air, cleanliness, and rest are pretty self-explanatory. Hippocrates says go outside and take a walk. Hippocrates says turn off the TV and go to sleep.

Hippocrates says take a shower. Eat healthy. Wait – I didn't say, "Hippocrates says." – Just kidding.

In fact, Hippocrates did say, "eat healthy." To implement a "healthy diet," some questions must first be answered, like what exactly constitutes a healthy diet. And rest assured, Hippocrates did not say, "Eat rice cakes and drink Diet Coke and you'll live forever!"

Instead, he viewed food as a tool to gain strength. In considering what foods are actually beneficial to the body, you can't always think of what is going to help you lose weight. In today's thin-obsessed society, a bowl of lettuce is the selection of many health nuts. But a bowl of lettuce is not going to help you fend off disease. In fact, there is very little nutrition in a head of iceberg lettuce. If you indulge in greener leaves, the benefit will be greater. A serving of iceberg lettuce contains eight calories, a gram of sugar, and one percent of your recommended daily allowance of Vitamin C. It does contain a whopping six percent of your recommended daily allowance of Vitamin A. In contrast, though, take one serving of green spinach. It seems similar enough, right? You can toss it in the same salad or stuff it into the same wrap. But the nutritional benefits of one serving of raw spinach are vastly more impressive. In one serving, there are seven calories, zero grams of sugar, 56% of your recommended daily allowance of Vitamin A, and 14% of Vitamin C.

Take another example of two easily interchangeable foods: white bread versus whole wheat. One serving of white bread contains 120 calories, one gram of fat, three grams of protein, one gram of dietary fiber, and two grams of sugar. The 306 milligrams of sodium are not to be overlooked either. On the other hand, take whole wheat bread. One serving contains only 68 calories and 148 milligrams of sodium, but the benefits are pretty much the same or better: one gram of fat, three grams of protein, two grams of sugar, and two grams of dietary fiber.

Of course, this article could go on and on, citing all the foods that are easily interchangeable and vastly different in nutritional value. The point is to opt for the ingredients that actually have value as an excellent way to fight disease. When preparing your food, think beyond losing weight or looking good. Think about being healthy, and remember that Hippocrates, the father of medicine, considered food to be one of the greatest tools in the fight against disease.

The Answer to a Winning Grin, Smile Solutions

The pain in your head, neck or ears may be coming from a source you would never suspect. In many cases the cause of the pain goes undiagnosed, but the solution may be right under your nose. That's right.....your mouth and your teeth may be the source of your pain!

People who suffer from headaches, chronic allergies and/or grind their teeth are the most susceptible candidates for this pain. Sometimes repetitive dental procedures, such as multiple crowns, extracted teeth, and even braces may leave a bite unbalanced. This condition could lead to muscle spasms that squeeze out the protective cartilage in jaw joints. The resulting pain can be in muscles and joints. If this muscle compression continues, nerves can be pinched causing even further discomfort.

The good news is that dentists, with advanced training and years of experience utilizing the K7 computerized jaw and muscle-measuring instrument, can rebalance these muscles by correcting the bite. This treatment can relieve years of chronic head and neck pain suffered by those with this condition.

People with this pain usually have chipped and broken teeth or very short teeth from years of clenching and grinding. The best news is that the most advanced dentists can use a combination of art and technology to bring back your smile to its natural beauty and youthful appearance, as well as restore function and stability that will make you look and feel great.

Teeth dominate facial beauty. Research shows that a person with a healthy smile will be hired first, trusted first, and will be more successful in all social areas. Studies reveal an attractive smile boosts self-confidence, heightens sexual appeal and raises perception of abilities and intelligence.

Finding a properly trained dentist requires research and questions. You should feel free to discuss the improvements you desire in your smile as well as the dentist's opinion regarding your treatment. The dentist should be able to show you a book of before and after photographs of cases he has completed, and welcome your questions concerning his experience. His training should include postdoctoral live patient courses that require the dentist to show proficiency at advanced cosmetic or reconstructive procedures. As with medicine, dentistry changes significantly every year and you want a dentist who stays current.

Another indication of a dentist's commitment to advanced training is the design and operation of his office. The office environment should be organized and relaxed and one should feel personally acknowledged and comfortable. The presence of computers, lasers, digital photography and digital x-rays all show a dedication to learn these new technologies and the desire to stay current.

Dr. Guy A. Spinner, a graduate of Hofstra University and The State University of New York at Buffalo Dental School, was the sole recipient of The Academy of General Dentistry Award. He graduated from the Las Vegas Institute for Advanced Dental Studies and is listed on the web at leadingdentists.com.

Over the past six years, Dr. Spinner has taken the following post doctoral "live patient" courses at the Las Vegas Institute:

Advanced Anterior Cosmetics, Advanced Posterior Restorations, Comprehensive Aesthetic

Reconstruction, Advanced K7 Training, Occlusion I, Occlusion II, Occlusion III, and Full Mouth Reconstruction. This qualifies Dr. Spinner to be at the highest trained level for Neuromuscular Full Mouth Rejuvenation.

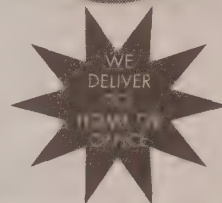

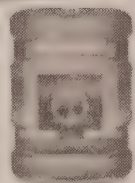

His professional memberships include: The American Academy of Cosmetic Dentistry, The International Academy of Comprehensive Aesthetics, The New York State Dental Association, The Suffolk County Dental Association, and The Southampton Hospital Dental Staff.

Dr. Spinner believes aesthetic dentistry must provide superior function as well as good looks. Beauty, combined with perfect function, promotes perfect health. One of the first things people notice is your smile. If chipped, stained, or crooked teeth are "hiding" the real you, or if chronic head or neck pain is part of your life, it's time for a smile makeover.

Beautify Your Body for Winter Vacation

As you prepare to head to a warmer climate this winter and put that bathing suit back on, dreaded thoughts may loom as your winterized body may not have its "summer toned" look. A new business in Amagansett, East Hampton Electrolysis Inc., owned by Mary Sireci, offers a solution to beautify your body just in time for that beach vacation. LaserDermology, a brand new cellulite reduction treatment, is the first and only FDA approved non-surgical cellulite treatment that minimizes cellulite by smoothing and tightening the skin. East Hampton Electrolysis is one of two facilities on Long Island, the only one in Suffolk County, offering this new breakthrough treatment.

TriActive LaserDermology was developed in Italy and has been used worldwide for the past four years. Recently introduced in North America in 2005, this new treatment has been getting rave results. In early studies, 80% of subjects have seen improved appearance of cellulite. LaserDermology works with three mechanisms: heat to stimulate microcirculation, cooling to reduce inflammation and massage for lymphatic drainage to break up connective tissue. The mechanism, which consists of six near-infrared diode lasers, gently breaks up fatty deposits, which makes the skin appear lumpy. Most parts of the body can be treated, with the thighs and buttocks being most popular followed by the face, stomach, upper arms and neck. The procedure is painless and feels similar to a traditional massage. LaserDermology has also been shown to temporarily relieve minor pain and muscle spasms and improve circulation. As well, it improves post-healing with liposuction, facelifts and Botox treatments. The treatment is done in 10 to 15 sessions, in any given area of the body, with monthly maintenance recommended.

East Hampton Electrolysis is offering an introductory package for LaserDermology: Lower body - 14 sessions $1400; Abs/back/arms - 14 sessions $1400; Whole body (neck down) - 14 sessions $2100; and Face - $200 each session. The facial treatment is especially popular for what is billed as a "48-hour facelift," a smoothing, toning and tightening that gives the face a smooth radiant glow, perfect for weddings or special events.

East Hampton Electrolysis also offers permanent, safe hair removal for men and women.

Electrolysis is the only FDA approved permanent hair removal method. As opposed to its counterpart laser hair removal, which is "permanent hair reduction," electrolysis works by killing the hair follicle at its root with a short-wave radio frequency, therefore no longer allowing growth. A series of treatments is required to completely eliminate hair growth in certain areas based on the cycle of hair growth. Electrolysis is a safe and relatively painless method to permanently remove undesired hair in various areas of the body.

Electrolysis and LaserDermology are offered by appointment only Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Electrologist Sireci is a graduate of The Berkowitz School of Electrolysis in Forest Hills, NY. She is a member of the American Electrolysis Association, the New York Electrolysis Association, the Allied Health Association and the International Guild of Professional Electrologists. As well, Sireci recently completed a training seminar for LaserDermology in Miami.

So whether it's a pre-vacation body toning, a 48-hour face-lift for an upcoming special event, or simply to get rid that unwanted cellulite, LaserDermology is the perfect solution.

East Hampton Electrolysis Inc. is located at 518 Montauk Highway, Room 106, in Amagansett. For more information please call (631) 267-9800.

Dan's HOME

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Anything But Boxed In

Boxwoods are beautiful plants that have long been valued for their use in landscapes, borders, as hedge plants, and as foundation and specimen plantings. They come in a variety of shapes/sizes and generally need little care. They are also one of the most abused of landscape plants.

A ride around East Hampton shows us that many gardeners do not know how to care for these wonderful shrubs. The display of globular clipped plantings attests to poor cultivation. In fact, many people hate boxwoods because they have had poor results. Poor pruning and care may result in failure to maintain healthy, uniform plants.

Boxwoods are considered one of the oldest ornamentals, and were probably introduced to the United States in the mid-1600s. They became the most popular foundation plant by the early 19th century. The most interesting forms are often referred to either as "American" or "English" boxwoods (Buxus sempervirens and Buxus sempervirens 'Suffruticosa'); however, there are more than 40 separate species and about 150 cultivars available.

The plants are evergreen, broad-leafed and range in heights from dwarf (one foot or so tall) to giant (up to 20 feet tall). They may spread from just a foot or so to more than 15 feet, and can be pyramidal, fan-shaped, or weeping. All cultivars tend to be bushy, with glossy, dark green leaves.

The plants are best suited for Zones five through nine. They do best in partial shade and need to be protected from harsh summer sun and winter winds. They are ideal for the East End in that they require soils that are slightly acidic-to-alkaline, moist-to-dry, and sandy or loamy.

Boxwoods should only be planted in well-drained soil. They should not be positioned near downspouts, under the drip-line of trees, or in areas that are consistently wet or boggy. Most gardeners fail with boxwoods because they do not provide adequate up front preparation.

For success, the planting hole should be about two times as wide as the root ball, but only as deep as the root ball. A good quality, porous or enriched topsoil should be used to fill in the hole. We recommend removing any burlap covering from the root ball before planting. Make sure the root ball is set in the ground at the same level as it grew in the nursery. Planting deeper usually results in poor plant vigor and eventual death.

After placing the plant in the hole firm the soil around the roots and water thoroughly. Regular, deep watering during the first two years is beneficial to the plant (much better than frequent, shallow watering). This encourages the development of well-branched, healthy roots.

Because boxwoods are shallow-rooted, and require consistent moisture, the best plants grow where they have two or three inches of organic mulch spread over the soil where they are planted. Suitable mulching materials include pine needles, bark mulch, or wood chips. Never use black plastic under the mulch because it traps moisture and rots the roots. Add additional mulch on a yearly basis. The mulch keeps the roots cool and also conserves water by slowing down evaporation.

Fertilize the plants once or twice yearly to maintain the area in which they are planted. However, we recommend testing the soil around the plant to be sure what you add maintains the right soil balance.

Boxwoods can be pruned to remove all or part of a current year's growth. (Never shear boxwoods like a hedge unless you want a very formal shape.) Pruning helps maintain plant compactness, uniformity and shape/size. In the first two or three years after planting, boxwoods should be pruned after each flush of growth to encourage additional branch development. Thereafter, they should only be pruned to maintain the desired shape. It is important to note that continuous pruning causes a thick outer shell of foliage with dense shade on the interior. This shading may result in some interior baldness. We suggest careful pruning at varying lengths to ensure some light enters the core of the plant and to create a natural look.

Pruning is best done in spring to remove branches that have died over winter. Pruning should not be done in late summer, as this forces new growth that cannot have time to harden off before winter.

We think boxwoods are one of the best choices for foundation plantings. Keep an eye out this spring as you shop!

You can contact Lance Brilliantine with any questions or comments at GardenLance@yahoo.com.

BEST OF THE BEST 2005

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

The East End of Long Island is virtually filled with historic homes and sites. It is what makes the area unique. The villages are subject to stringent guidelines such as height, the type of signage, modifications to the structure and so forth in order to maintain the continuity necessary to keep historic towns historic. Once a building has become registered with the National Register of Historic Places it is then subject to the Register's regulation in order to preserve and protect the property as adequately as possible. This is all for the good of the East End, of course, because it limits variations to a property that may otherwise compromise its integrity and authenticity. It is the very reason why the villages have remained much as they were more than 100 years ago and why visitors are enchanted by their charm. In addition to the aesthetic value, preserving the historic significance of some East End properties makes them priceless. For years, right-minded groups and concerned village officials have stepped up to save many an East End historic landmark. A series of concerts were held to save the Montauk Lighthouse years back. Performers such as Billy Joel, James Taylor, Ray Charles and Paul Simon (a local Montauk resident himself) came out for the effort. Just last year concerned residents in Sag Harbor saw to the restoration of the old theatre's movie marquee when it was going to be replaced with a new and improved version. The Maycroft Estate in North Haven is in the process of being fully restored to its original grandeur after selling for $25 million to a single owner. Much concern was raised at the possibility of developing the site with McMansions. The de Menil Estate on Further Lane in East Hampton that may now be valued as high as $90 million is home to multiple historical buildings dating back to the 18th and 19th centuries. Spread over the estate's 40 acres are historic homes such as "The Purple House" circa 1773, that once graced East Hampton's Main Street, an 1800s cottage from Cutchogue.

On the North Fork the Captain Hawkins house in Jamesport became the first Long Island Designer Show House on the North Fork this past fall and as a result was fully renovated and restored, saving the failing mansion from ruin. The transformation was astounding and invited its visitors to take a nostalgic tour back in time. But some residences are not as fortunate as we saw when the historic Bayberryland mansion was demolished two years ago.

Historic value brings with it a higher dollar value. Buyers looking for a piece of East End history, and the prestige that comes with owning it, drive prices way up as we saw this past summer when the beautiful Villa Maria in Water Mill was placed on the market. Bidding went on for months until it finally sold for $35 million, $10 million more than the asking price.

If you are in the market for history it can be found on both Forks. Currently on the market on the North Fork, in South Jamesport, is the old Aldrich House. This home, circa 1837, was kept in the family for three generations. It has had only two owners since and is actually made up of two adjoining houses. Built by James Hallock, it still has many of its original details including the mantel in its parlor, 10 ft ceilings, crown moldings and wood plank flooring. The 5-bedroom, 2-bath home with a two-car garage and finished attic is just a walk to the Peconic Bay. It is listed with Colony Realty in Jamesport for $639,000.

On the South Fork of course the price tag gets much higher. In Sag Harbor Village on Captains Row, The Hall House is priced at $2,350,000. The 3-bedroom, 2.5-bath, Greek revival has both bay and harbor views. It was originally built in the 1840s, has been meticulously renovated to feature period details and has five working fireplaces, and a sundeck that overlooks Sag Harbor Cove. It is listed with Brown Harris Stevens.

In Amagansett, the legendary Farmers Market on Main Street is now for sale. This property is known worldwide and is familiar to all who frequent the East End as the place to buy your produce. The East End landmark has been owned and operated since the 1950s. The 3000 sq ft business operation includes 9 acres as well as a 5-bedroom Main Street historic residence. It is also listed with Brown Harris Stevens at $9.5 million.

SPREADING THE CHEER

Dear Dan,

Again I thank you for the credible Who's Here article on me. The response has been overpoweringly positive. It has made a lot of people "feel good," that's a great feeling.

Thank you so much.

Happy New Year.

Jay Lockett Sears

LIGHTS OUT

Dear Dan and David,

Since you both have been great supporters of all things "dark sky" and "starry sky" friendly, in the future I (beg) ask you to give me a call for clarifications if referenced. I would have been able to correct the statements like the DeGroots did, about "dark sky" lighting. They are spreading a "mis-truth" (to put it politely). I would have told you this:

The DeGroots' original lighting at their ice hockey rink last year violated the lighting code that was in effect at that time. They used dozens of unshielded floodlights all around the rink, which did not benefit the skaters or the neighbors and produced glare, light trespass and sky glow. They needed to change their lighting regardless of the new law that was passed to have the lighting reviewed by the Planning Department (as is routine for all commercial lighting). When the Planning Department researched "regulation" hockey rink lighting, they determined that 30 foot-candles was "needed" (I would argue against that much light in a residential zone, and certainly, it is too much light to see well on ice which is 90% reflective.) When I was asked for advice, I suggested that the DeGroot's architect seek the help of a lighting designer for sports lighting that could mitigate the light trespass while providing high levels of lighting. This "world class" lighting designer from Seattle produced a lighting plan FOR FREE that would contain, as much as possible, the light on the property and provide 30 foot-candles. In order to spread that much light across such a wide area, you have to use higher poles. On the basis of the tall poles (40 feet), the DeGroots (free) lighting plan was rejected. Not to mention that the light trespass onto neighboring properties was 9 foot-candles, when 0.1 is the maximum allowed (and is still excessive).

However, there is still no such thing as "dark sky" and neighbor friendly sports lighting with 30 foot-candles on ice. Parking lots are lit to 2 foot-candles, and we can see just fine. For recreational (not League) skating, that would be more than adequate lighting.

I resent the implications that "dark sky lighting" is expensive. When we use light sensibly with shielded fixtures and turn them off when not needed, we save energy and the environment. And we can see the stars.

If anyone has any questions about "dark sky" issues, I would appreciate a call. I am listed.

Thank you.

LOOK OVER HERE!

Dear Dan,

Why is Hampton Bays so ignored? I have come to understand that the Shinnecock Canal separates more than just land. Diane Saatchi's regular article The Hamptons Report, (Dan's Papers, January 13, 2006), includes only those communities within Southampton Township "East of the Canal." Why not those "West of the Canal?"

Debbie Tuma's excellent article Forgotten Hamptons about Meri Wallace's short documentary Homeless in the Hamptons noted Ms. Wallace ".....went with a cameraman into the woods in Hampton Bays and we filmed a campsite (of homeless people)....." Additionally, she noted that there are motels being selected by Social Services in Hampton Bays to house the homeless....."

Both articles left me feeling again that Hampton Bays, if mentioned at all, is referred to in pejorative tones.

Hampton Bays is a wonderful community - moving forward and dealing with issues facing all East Enders. Your article Road For Sale included Hampton Bays only by inference when you cited "The East End has just 8% of the county's population. Yet it pays 24% of the County's tax revenue." Homeowners in Hampton Bays are East End taxpayers too.

I recently saw a pillow for sale in a Sag Harbor shop that depicted a road map beginning in Quogue and extending to Montauk. Guess the only community not highlighted on that "pillow map"? You got it. Hampton Bays.

I enjoy reading Dan's Papers every week. I would enjoy it more if I could read once in a while a positive article about Hampton Bays. We are not the "Un-Hamptons". There are outstanding attributes that make us who live in Hampton Bays proud. Cross the Canal and take a look.

SHARK STORY

Dear Dan,

I was disappointed that we never met last summer and that our fishing trip never happened.

Frank Mundus just called and said he has recently found that some scientists have come up with an accurate formula to estimate the weight of white sharks. Using the complicated formula and the dimensions he took at the time we caught the great white the weight comes out to be 6300 pounds, almost 50% more than the 4500 we've used over the years. In order to register the new dimensions in the archives he needs to get a signed affidavit from someone who witnessed him taking the measurements. The only person he remembers that would be able to do that was the 'mate' who held the tape while he took the measurements. However he hasn't any idea who the mate was. All he recalls is that he was a jockey who asked him if he would teach him and after that one day, his first, he never showed up again.

We are hoping you have some records that might have this guy's name.

I hope to hear from you soon.

Police Blotter

Radical Driver

A woman in Amagansett received a call from her boyfriend telling her that he saw somebody wildly driving her parents' car on the road. The boyfriend claimed that the driver of the car narrowly missed him while he was driving on the same street and that the car was swerving across the yellow line. The joy ride was reported to police. Police have begun an investigation and currently are interrogating really bad drivers.

* * *

Fine Dining Raccoon

A raccoon was found inside a small crawl space below a restaurant in East Hampton. After investigating the scene, officers found the raccoon drinking expensive red wine and eating filet mignon. Officers that arrived at the scene recognized the raccoon and claimed to have seen it dining out at several other Hamptons restaurants. Police have told the raccoon that if they see him out at another restaurant he is going to have to pay for his food. "He's a better tipper than most Hamptonites," one waiter was quoted.

* * *

Begging To Be Stolen

Harbor and then left the scene to go walking through town. When he came back to his car, the wallet was gone. The man called police to report it. When police arrived and heard the story, they advised the man to not leave his wallet on the hood of his car in the future.

* * *

Too Much Noise

A woman complained that she heard too much noise outside of a Sag Harbor nightclub. Police responded to the call and upon entering the nightclub found the scene to be a lot of fun. Police have advised the woman that complained about the noise to stick cotton balls into her ears.

* * *

Light Bulb

A man in Southampton was arrested after throwing a lamp at his girlfriend's head. Police asked the girlfriend what made her finally call the police. She replied to the question by saying to police, "It was like a light bulb went on over my head."

* * *

Aggravated Driver

A woman in Hampton Bays was caught driving a car without a license and was charged with aggravated unlicensed operation of a motor vehicle in the second degree. Upon learning that the charge was an aggravated charge, the woman tried to convince police that she wasn't aggravated by saying that she was having a great day and that everything was going fine. Police did not believe her, however, and almost charged her with lying about not being aggravated while operating the motor vehicle.

* * *

The Flare Witch Project

A woman in Sag Harbor reported that an ignited flare was thrown into her home a little past midnight. Police, said that the same type of crime had been reported the previous week, at a different residence. No human injuries were reported, but police did find two flares that had been burned to death.

* * *

Fake Twenty

According to police, a man attempted to pay for gas with a counterfeit bill in Orient. Police have been thoroughly investigating the incident to determine a motive behind using counterfeit money to pay for gas. Police believe that it may have something to do with the fact that gas prices are absolutely ridiculous.

Why? Because these loans are typically tied to the prime rate and are structured as revolving debt. Much like a credit card.

The Prime rate is now 7.25%. For most Equity Loans this can mean a total rate of 7.75% to 8.75% or higher and are pushing monthly payments higher. While it may have been a good idea while rates were low, now is the time to cash in on your past savings.

Reposition that debt into traditional type mortgages that still have historically low rates will result in lower monthly payments and faster pay off of the debt.

Is This the Year You Finally Buy Waterfront?

On a clear day from this spectacular Orient sound front location, you can see the light-houses at the mouth of the Connecticut River. Step out of your seaside outdoor shower after a morning run on the beach and enjoy lunch on the bluestone terrace, or head to your water view studio to work on that novel. You won't be disturbed in this exclusive, quiet community of artistic Manhattan professionals. At the end of the day, stretch out in a bluff-top Adirondack chair and watch as sun sinks into the sea, cocktail in hand. Chic, designer Hamptons-style cottage boasts chef's kitchen for entertaining (or not), cherry floors, fireplace, two bedrooms, one-and-a-half tile baths, permit for sound-view Gunite pool in the works and lovely, privet-hedged landscaping. Shy acre and a quarter presents almost limitless possibilities for expansion, and you won't need a variance to build that 6,000 square foot dream house, if that's your thing. If not, enjoy the simple life as is. Pristine, turn-key condition. Welcome home, you've earned it.
